THE POWERS ART GALLERY COLLECTION

THE POWERS COLLECTION.

AT the death of the late Daniel W. Powers, of Rochester, an effort was made by certain public-spirited citizens of that thriving place to preserve intact his collection of several hundred paintings, which for some years had been accessible to the public there, as well as enjoyed by Mr. Powers and his friends. Rochester had become a sort of art center for the surrounding district, and the Powers collection, including, as it did, examples of both old and modern masters, American as well as foreign, was the rallying point.

The efforts of these citizens of Rochester to raise enough money to buy the collection from Mr. Powers's estate failed, partly perhaps for the reason that the value of such an aggregation is very large, even on the most conservative estimates. It was decided, therefore, by the executors that nearly three hundred canvases selected from the Powers collection should be disposed of, besides some marble statuary and a fine clock designed by Eugene Cornu and made for the late A. T. Stewart, and the American Art Association of this city was chosen as the medium for turning them into money. These paintings are now at the American Art Galleries, Madison Square South, where they will be exhibited next week to press and public, after which Mr. Thomas E. Kirby, of the Art Association, will auction them off at Chickering Hall on the evenings of January 18, 19 and 20.

The pictures here reproduced are, to a certain extent, typical of the collection, though perhaps it is too much to say that any half-dozen canvases can be typical of 300. Van Marcke's "Rich Pasturage" is one of the most noted of the Powers collection. Its soft firmness and decision and its strong composition are suggested in the black and white reproduction with considerable success. August Hagborg's "October, Potato Gatherers," which Mr. Powers bought at a Paris Salon, is well known, while the Brozik interior, "The Falconer's Recital," came from the Mary J. Morgan collection sale. Luben's "Under the Hammer" tells its own story and tells it well.

The two American painters represented here, J. G. Brown and George H. Boughton, are both widely known and valued. Mr. Brown's paintings of New York gamins, in which are reflected not a little of his own geniality and love of boy nature, have found homes in hundreds of collections. "The Challenge," which is the title page of this Magazine, was painted in 1881, but is as characteristic and full of fun as though it had been done yesterday. Mr. Boughton's Katrina Van Tassel reflects some of the quaintness and charm of Washington Irving, who inspired her.

CONDITIONS OF SALE.

1. The highest bidder to be the buyer, and if any dispute arise between two or more bidders, the lot so in dispute shall be immediately put up again and re-sold.

2. The purchasers to give their names and addresses, and to pay down a cash deposit, or the whole of the purchase-money, if required, in default of which the lot or lots so purchased to be immediately put up again and re-sold.

3. The lots to be taken away at the buyer's expense and risk upon the conclusion of the sale, and the remainder of the purchase-money to be absolutely paid or otherwise settled for to the satisfaction of the auctioneer, on or before delivery; in default of which, the undersigned will not hold himself responsible if the lots be lost, stolen, damaged, or destroyed, but they will be left at the sole risk of the purchaser.

4. The sale of any article is not to be set aside on account of any error in the description. All articles are exposed for public exhibition one or more days, and are sold just as they are, without recourse.

5. To prevent inaccuracy in delivery, and inconvenience in the settlement of the purchases, no lot can, on any account, be removed during the sale.

6. Upon failure to comply with the above conditions, the money deposited in part payment shall be forfeited; all lots uncleared within the time aforesaid shall be re-sold by public or private sale, without further notice, and the deficiency (if any) attending such re-sale shall be made good by the defaulter at this sale, together with all charges attending the same. This condition is without prejudice to the right of the auctioneer to enforce the contract made at this sale, without such re-sale, if he thinks fit.

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTES AND INDEX.

ACHENBACH (OSWALD),

Germany.

Born at Düsseldorf, 1827. Brother and pupil of Andreas Achenbach. Medals, Paris, 1859, 1861, 1863. Legion of Honor, 1863.

No. 13—Garibaldi's Caprera Home.

ADAM (BENNO),

Germany.

Born at Munich, July 15, 1812. Son and pupil of Albrecht, and one of the best animal painters of the Munich School. He has been called the German Landseer on account of his skill in treating domestic animals, combined with human figures.

No. 115—Ass and Colt.

ADAN (LOUIS ÉMILE),

France.

Born at Paris, March 26, 1839. Pupil of Picot and Cabanel. Medals, Paris, 1875 and 1882.

No. 235—Marguerite.

ALVAREZ (LUIS),

Spain.

Born at Madrid in 1841, in narrow circumstances, and early left an orphan. He contrived, however, to secure entrance at the Academy, and made his way thence to Rome, almost penniless and without resources to call upon for aid. His first picture, exhibited in Florence in 1861, though completed in the face of the most depressing difficulties, obtained a medal, and was purchased, when he carried it to Madrid for exhibition, by Queen Isabella, who pensioned the artist in order to enable him to continue his studies. King Amadeus continued Alvarez in favor and gave him government commissions, and he has received honors from King Humbert of Italy. He has been one of the most influential men in shaping the present Spanish school of art. Was a pupil of Madrazo the elder.

No. 125—Hide and Seek.

ANDERS (E.),

Germany.

Pupil of Düsseldorf Academy.

No. 83—Mother's Love.

APOL (LOUIS),

France.

Contemporary French School.

No. 101—River Scene.

ARNOUX (MICHAEL),

France.

Born at Paris. Contemporary French School. Pupil of Pierre Édouard Frère.

No. 236—The Old Hunter.

ARTZ (DAVID ADOLPHE CONSTANT),

Holland.

Born at The Hague, 1837. Pupil of Mollinger, later of Josef Israels. He made his first impression as a painter of peasants, but during later years, possibly because it had been said that he had taken his cue from Israels, he gave his attention mostly to depicting the life and character of the Dutch people who dwell near the sea and gain their livelihood from its waters. His first exhibits at the Salon won for him recognition in the Paris art world.

No. 250—Gathering Wild Flowers.

ATALAYA (E.),

Italy.

Contemporary Roman-Spanish School. Studio in Paris.

No. 128—*An Outing.BALLAVOINE (JULES FRÉDÉRIC),

France.

Born at Paris. History and genre painter. Pupil of Pils.

Awarded a medal of the 3d Class, Paris, 1880.

No. 98—*A Dream.BALLVE (H.),

France.

Contemporary French School. Studio in Paris.

No. 203—*Gathering Fagots in the Forest.BEARD (WILLIAM H.),

United States.

Born at Painesville, O., 1825. Began as a traveling portrait painter; settled in Buffalo, N. Y., 1850, and visited Europe on his savings in 1857. Studied at Düsseldorf, and painted and sketched in Italy, Switzerland, and France. Settled in New York City, 1860; became a National Academician, 1862. Adopted animal painting as his specialty, investing his pictures with an interest of idea by giving to the brute creation a suggestion of the action and expression of the human race.

No. 51—Voices of the Night.

No. 218—"Go When I'm a Mind To."

BEAUQUESNE (WILFRED C.),

France.

Born at Rennes. Pupil of Horace Vernet and Émile Lecomte.

A painter of military subjects and battle scenes.

No. 209—*The Alarm.*No. 220—*Bugle Call.*No. 254—On Guard.

BECKER (Prof. KARL),

Germany.

Born at Berlin, 1820. Pupil of the Berlin Academy, of Von Klover, of Heinrich Hess, and Cornelius, and Pensioner of the Berlin Academy at Paris and Rome. Member and Vice-President of the Academy of Berlin. Member of the Academy of Vienna and of the Royal Society of Letters and Fine Arts of Belgium. Officer of the Order of Leopold. Medals at Berlin, Vienna, Munich, and Paris.

No. 69—Italian Mother at Prayer.

BENEDICTER (JOSEF),

Germany.

Born at Fischingen, Württemberg, June 4, 1843. Architecture painter. Pupil from 1863, of Munich Academy, lastly under Professor Alex. Wagner, until he joined in the campaign against France in 1870. After the war he went to Holland, and in 1876, visited Florence, Rome, and Naples.

No. 35—A Dutch Kitchen.

BENLLIURE (JOSE),

Spain.

A leading member of the Spanish colony at Rome, José Benlliure combines in himself the kindred gifts of the painter and the sculptor in a high degree. He is a native of Valencia, where he was born about 1858, and a pupil of Domingo, under whose able tutorship his talent ripened early into original brilliancy and strength. He secured his first honors at the Madrid Salon, and after his settlement in Rome became a popular exhibitor at the exhibitions of Italy and Germany, whose medals followed that of his native country. At the Munich Exhibition of 1889 his was one of the works purchased for the National Art Museum, and they are received with equal favor in England, where they figure in the leading private collections. Señor Benlliure is one of the artists pensioned by the Spanish Government for residence in Italy, and some of his most successful and ambitious compositions have been executed to the order of the state for the decoration of public edifices. His fine color, spirited technique and close appreciation of the picturesque, place him among the foremost of the bright galaxy of artistic stars who sustain for Spanish art to-day the honors won for it by Fortuny.

No. 11—The Picador's Reward.

BLUME (EDMUND),

Austria.

A native of Vienna. A painter of genre subjects, particularly those relating to the Tyrolese peasants' life.

No. 82—Grandma's Story.

BOGGS (FRANK M.),

United States.

The French, who are always keenly appreciative of the dramatic quality in art, were the first to hail in F. M. Boggs a painter of sea and shore who could not only convey the impression of what he saw, but of how he felt it, too. Born at Springfield, O., in 1855, it was not until 1880 that he appeared in the Salon as an exhibitor. His recognition abroad was immediate. His first Salon picture was talked about. His second, in 1881, was purchased by the French Government for the Luxembourg collection. This was a representation of the "Place de la Bastille," handled with striking effectiveness, yet a close adherence to the fundamental and characteristic facts of the subject. At the Salon of 1882, the French nation again set the seal of its approval on his art, by the purchase of his "Port d'Isigny," in which he showed, as a marine painter, a power quite equal to his previous manifestations in another line of subjects. Medals at foreign and American exhibitions followed each other in rapid succession, and his free and dashing style, a sort of gallant independence of thought and execution, as of a man who saw nature alive and painted her so, commanded the public admiration, while it secured the approbation of more critical and analytical minds. At the first Prize Fund Exhibition at the American Art Galleries, in 1885, Mr. Boggs secured one of the $2,500 awards with his "Rough Day at Honfleur," which is now in the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston.

No. 122—View of Dordrecht.

BONHEUR (MARIE ROSA),

France.

In her ripe old age, the most distinguished member of her sex in the history of art can look back to her youth of trial and struggle over a life rich in all the rewards that perseverance can conquer for genius. Born of an artistic family in 1822, at Bordeaux, Rosa Bonheur's entry into art was attended by a bitter poverty, that sometimes threatened to end in desperation. Her father, a worthy and industrious but unfortunate artist, brought her to Paris in 1830, after the death of her mother, and narrow as his means were, put her to school. But the girl, born an artist, rebelled against mere book-learning, and rather inclined to share with the boys their truanancies in the fields. She had acquired some skill in drawing, from imitating her father at his work, and this art she cultivated at school to the neglect of most of her other studies. Finally, the conviction of her vocation forced itself upon her father, and he removed her from the seminary, and set her to copying pictures in the Louvre. From the start she gained a little money by the sale of her copies, and of little studies and pictures painted at home, and after assuring herself that she might hope for patronage, she turned her attention largely to the painting of animals, of which she was very fond. The oddity of a young girl choosing such a field of labor attracted attention to her. Her ability commanded respect. In a modest way prosperity began to come to her, and with every annual exhibition her fame grew and her admirers multiplied. Her first original pictures were exhibited at Bordeaux, in 1841. One represented two rabbits, and the other goats and a ram. In 1849 she was made director of the Paris Free School of Design for Young Girls, and in 1853 she crowned her fame with the great "Horse Fair," now in the Metropolitan Museum of Art. Every possible honor has been conferred upon her by her own country and other European states. The highest, perhaps, was that embodied in the order of the Crown Prince, late the Emperor Frederick, of Prussia to his army, to rigidly respect her house and studio, when the surges of war fairly washed its walls with blood. Surrounded by her pet beasts in her uninvaded garden, she alone, of all the artists of Paris, was able to continue her devotion to her art during the great war that swept the last Napoleonic Empire out of existence.

No. 87—The Choice of the Flock.

BOUGHTON (GEORGE H.),

United States.

Although of English birth, and for the past thirty years a resident of his native country, the United States still claims George H. Boughton as an American artist. Nor is this without reason. Born in England in 1834, he was brought to this country in 1837 by his parents, and at Albany, N. Y., commenced to instruct himself in the art for which he manifested talent in his earliest boyhood. It was at Albany that he opened his first studio in 1850, and the old American Art Union was almost his first patron. It was on the proceeds of its patronage that, in 1853, he went to Europe to improve himself in his art, and from this journey he returned to resume his residence in Albany, and subsequently in New York City, where he remained several years. His first exhibit at the National Academy of Design was made in 1858, with "A Winter Twilight," and it was not until 1859 that he returned to Europe, first settling down to study in Paris, and in 1861 going to London, where he has since remained. In 1863 his pictures made their mark at the British Institution, and in 1864 at the Royal Academy. American collectors continued their support, and English connoisseurs recognized and encouraged him. Thus began for the artist a career of phenomenal success, which time has only augmented. Mr. Boughton became a National Academician in 1871, and a Member of the Royal Academy in 1888, and has received many continental recognitions and honors.

No. 41—Katrina Van Tassel.

BOUGUEREAU (WILLIAM ADOLPHE),

France.

One day in 1842 or so, there was a veritable riot among the students of the Alaux Art School at Bordeaux. It was occasioned by the award of the prize of the year to a shopkeeper's young clerk, from La Rochelle, who was taking daily drawing lessons of two hours each, which his employer allowed him to abstract from business. The young Bohemians had such a contempt for the young clerk that they resented with violence the fact that he should win the honor of the school above their heads. But Bouguereau received the prize in spite of their protests, and it decided his career. He determined to become an artist. His family objected. He persisted, threw up his employment at the shop, and went, penniless, to live with his uncle, who was a priest at Saintonge, and to paint portraits of the townspeople for a few francs each. Out of his earnings he contrived to save 900 francs, on which capital he proceeded to Paris, entered the studio of Picot, and secured admission to the École des Beaux Arts in 1843, at the age of eighteen years. He lived by incredible shifts, finally receiving some small assistance from his family, until, in 1850, he won the Prix de Rome. For four years he was a pensioner and student in Rome, and he returned to Paris an artist competent to the execution of great works. Public commissions and private patronage soon laid the foundation of his fortune. He became a Member of the Legion in 1859, and an Officer in 1876, during which year he was also elected a Member of the Institute—of which he has since been President. He has received the Medal of Honor twice—in 1878 and in 1885—and is decorated with numberless foreign orders.

BOUTIBONNE (CHARLES ÉDOUARD),

France.

Born at Buda-Pesth, Hungary, of French parents. Genre painter. Pupil of Winterhalter. Medal, 3d Class, 1847.

BRELING (H.),

Germany.

Contemporary German School. Pupil of Munich Academy.

No. 217—*The Jolly Fiddler.BRETON (JULES ADOLPHE),

France.

Born at Courrières in 1827, he was schooled under Drölling and Dévigne, whose lessons in technique only furnished him with a foundation upon which to create a style of his own. He commenced to claim attention in 1849, received his first medal in 1855, one of the second class in 1857, and after first-class awards in 1859, 1861, and 1867, was granted a Medal of Honor in 1872. He had been accorded the Legion of Honor in 1861, and was made an Officer in 1867. Prosperity had come with fame. He was admitted to be, as an original and sympathetic delineator of village and country life of the happier order, what Jean François Millet was to its more grandiose and pathetic side. His poetic temperament invested his pictures with a subtle, sentimental charm. Masterpiece after masterpiece passed into the great collections of Europe and America. The sale of his "Evening in Finisterre" and of his "First Communion" in this city was attended with positive public enthusiasm.

No. 9—*Portrait of Himself.BRIDGMAN (FREDERICK A.),

United States,

Born at Tuskegee, Ala., in 1847. At an early age he was employed during the day as an engraver by the American Bank Note Company in New York. In 1866 young Bridgman abandoned the steel plate for the canvas, and went to Paris to study art at the École des Beaux Arts. Gérôme, under whom he worked, became sincerely interested in him, and his encouragement had doubtless much to do with the young man's advancement of himself. His first exhibited pictures were of subjects drawn from his summer sketching tours in Brittany. Afterwards, for several years, he painted from material found in the Pyrenees, where he settled in 1870. From the Spanish border he went further afield, to Algiers, Egypt, and up the Nile. His personal movements can be clearly traced in his works, from his "American Circus in France," which first attracted marked attention to him, while he was yet almost a student in the schools, down to the latest records of the activity of his brush in Algiers. He commenced exhibiting in the National Academy of Design in this city in 1871; in 1874 was made an Associate, and in 1881 became a full Academician. Meanwhile he had won his medals in Paris, and in 1878 had been received into the Legion of Honor. Mr. Bridgman has his studio in Paris, but frequently visits his native country, and has made exhibitions of his works, which have enjoyed deserved success.

BROWN (JOHN G.),

United States.

Born at Durham, England, 1831. Studied at Newcastle-on-Tyne and in the Edinburgh Academy of Design. Painted portraits in London, and in 1853 came to New York, where he studied at the National Academy of Design. While engaged in painting portraits in this city, he cultivated an original style of genre which speedily attracted attention to him, and whose popularity led to his final adoption of this walk of art. Became a member of the National Academy, 1863; is one of the founders of the American Water Color Society, of which he is now the President; and the Artists' Fund Society.

BROZIK (VACSLAV VON),

Austria.

Born at Tzemoschna, near Pilsen, Bohemia, 1852. Pupil of the Academy at Prague, the Academy at Munich under Piloty, and

M. de Munkácsy in Paris. He received a medal at the Salon of 1878, and gold medals at Expositions in Berlin, Vienna, Munich, and Brussels. He was made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor in 1893, and an Officer of the Legion in 1896; Member of the Institute, 1897. He is a Knight of the Order of Francis Joseph of Austria, Commander of the Order of Letters and Arts of Austria, Knight of the Order of Leopold of Belgium, and of St. Michael of Bavaria. He was created a Baron by the Austrian Emperor in 1897, and has been appointed painter to the Imperial Family of Austria. He is also Director of the Academy of Fine Arts at Prague.

CAZIN (JEAN CHARLES),

France.

Jean Charles Cazin, born at Samer, Pas-de-Calais, was one of the pupils of that remarkable master, Lecoq de Boisbaudran, whose name has been assured of immortality, not through his own pictures, but through the genius of the scholars to whom he gave their development. De Boisbaudran was one of those rarely gifted men whose intelligence and sympathy penetrated the souls of his followers, analyzing their sentiments and natural inclinations in art and propagating them as the gardener does a flower, with tender and loving skill. From the studio of this master of masters young Cazin won his first honors in 1876 with his "Dock-Yard," following it in 1877 with "The Flight into Egypt," which confirmed his title to respectful recognition. He was in those days a painter of history, sacred and profane, and of genre, and as such he won his first-class medal in 1880, and in 1882 his ribbon of the Legion of Honor. It is a peculiarity of the Boisbaudran school that it has graduated some of the greatest realists in contemporary art, among whom may be mentioned Legros, now at the head of his rank in London; Gabriel Ferrier, a sterling talent full of soul and fire, and L'Hermitte, a painter of the people and the fields of his birth and boyhood, in whom the future may find a worthy successor of Millet. To their ranks Cazin has become joined, and his influence on current art is perhaps more potent than that of any of his colleagues of the Boisbaudran atelier. Into the landscape art of France, fallen into a stagnated imitative mannerism based on the master-manners of Corot, Rousseau, Dupré, and Diaz, he has blown a breath of new and healthy life. Like his great predecessors, he is a naturalist, and like them he sees nature with the eye of a poet, made keen and lucid by the stimulus of inspiration, and harmonic with the echoing chords of a sympathetic soul.

France.

Born in 1600; died at Rome, Nov. 23, 1682. French School. Landscape painter. Real name Gelée. Pupil in drawing of his elder brother Jean. Wood engraver at Freiburg in Breisgau. Taken to Rome in 1613 by a relative, he went thence to Naples, where he spent two years as pupil of Godfrey Wals, a painter from Cologne. From 1619 to April, 1625, he lived at Rome, working as apprentice and valet to Agostino Tassi—who was employed by the Cardinal di Montalto to decorate his palace—after which he returned to Lorraine by Venice and Tyrol. At Nancy he found employment in decorating the Chapelle des Carmes for Duke Charles III. with figures and architectural ornaments, until the middle of the year 1627, when he returned to Rome to remain for the rest of his life. Here he became intimate with Suardart, Peter de Laar, and Ponssin, and spent his time in making studies in the Campagna at Tivoli, Frascati, and Subiaco. By 1634 Claude had become a celebrity of Rome and had painted many pictures, although none are known of a date earlier than the "Village Fête," and the "Seaport," at the Louvre, of the year 1639. From the Church of the Trinità di Monte, where he was buried, and where his monument was destroyed by the French in 1798, his remains were removed in 1840 to the Church of S. Luigi in Francesi at the suggestion of M. Thiers.

CONSTANT (JEAN JOSEPH BENJAMIN),

France.

A picture which caused more than usual comment at the Salon of 1870 was the work of a young artist who had made his first exhibit there only a year or two before. It was entitled "Too Late." The gay city, which never fails to appreciate an allegory, even if it be at her own expense, took this one up and made the name of Benjamin Constant famous. He was a Parisian of good family, born in 1845. A pupil of Cabanel, he had rejected Cabanel's manner totally, and in spite of the impression made by his "Too Late," had not yet settled on his true avocation in art. It came to him by accident. Having drifted into Spain after the war, he commenced to experience the seductions of its semi-tropical life and nature, and when he went to North Africa with an embassy to the Sultan of Morocco, the key to his art was found. He became an Orientalist and the leader among them. His travels enriched him in themes for his brush, which won him wealth and the honors that are quite as dear to the artist. So wide a success did his Oriental subjects meet that he fell under the reproach of being unable to do anything else. As a practical refutation of this charge he produced a series of historical compositions and characterizations quite equal in technique and power to his previous pictures.

COROT (JEAN BAPTISTE CAMILLE),

France.

Jean Baptiste Camille Corot was born at Paris, 1796, the son of a prosperous tradesman. Pupil of Michallon and Victor Bertin, and traveled in Italy in 1826. Traveled much in France, painting from nature and creating a style out of his experiments. Although at first neglected by the public, his patrimonial fortune enabled him to live comfortably and paint to suit himself. He received medals, 1833, 1848, 1855, 1867; was given the Legion of Honor in 1846 and became an Officer in 1867. He died in Paris in 1875. The influence of Corot on the art of our time cannot be overestimated. He lifted landscape painting into the realm of idyllic poetry, just as Rousseau gave it a tragic, and Diaz a romantic, significance. Each man painted according to his feelings. The spirit of the South which burned in Diaz, the melancholy of an unhappy life which darkened Rousseau, were replaced in Corot by a genial gayety of temperament which reflects itself in his works. He was one of the earliest of the men of 1830 to receive public recognition, and when success did come to him it atoned for the neglect of the past.

COURBET (GUSTAVE),

France.

The influence of Courbet on French art was overestimated at one time. He was a man of great gifts, but too narrow in mind and coarse in mental fiber to make a leader. He could bully men but not persuade them, and it was part of his dogmatic nature to demand absolute devotion and belief or reject all compromise upon it. He himself did not perceive the weakness of his own character, and his failure to force an artistic issue upon France rendered him furious and resentful. He went so far at one time as to almost abjure his native country in favor of Germany, and made it his boast to welcome foreign honors and reject those of his own nation. All of this reacted against him, and raised a storm of unmerited reprobation that recoiled upon his works. He died in exile in Switzerland, in 1878, a man of sixty years, broken in fortune, regretted by few, and mourned by fewer still. Since his death his great artistic gifts have slowly won their true appreciation, and the tumultuous spirit of the man fading from memory, leaves the fame of the artist shining as it deserves. Born at Ornans, Courbet was originally destined for the law and sent to Paris in 1839 to attend the schools. He neglected his legal studies to lounge among the studios, and did some desultory painting under David d'Angers. He may be considered as self-created in art, however, and his very first exhibited picture, in 1844, had in it a marked originality and a bold and personal style.

COUTURE (THOMAS),

France.

At the age of thirty-two years, almost unknown outside of artistic circles and not any too widely known within them, Thomas Couture made himself immortal by a single work. The "Romans of the Decadence" took the art world by storm. Couture, born at Senlis in 1815, had studied art under Gros and Delaroche. In 1840 he showed his first picture at the Salon. In 1879 just after his death, his last was exhibited. In these thirty-eight years his vast energy had overcrowded itself in works which followed each other rapidly and yet failed to keep pace with the sweep of his fecund imagination. He once complained that he needed the arms of four men to accomplish what he dreamed. He was by turns idealist and satirist, a painter of facts, of creations, and of reflections upon human folly worthy of the invention of Balzac. Such a man naturally could not go through life without contests, and in spite of success, fame, wealth, and the devotion of scholars from whose ranks came some of the great painters of our time, Couture ended his life a disappointed man. He quarreled with his contemporaries on points in and beliefs of art. He quarreled with the Empire, which was only too anxious to conciliate him with patronage, on a trivial detail of one of the great works Napoleon III. had commissioned of him. As a result of the one he withdrew from social companionship. As a result of the other, he ceased to contribute his works to the Salon Exhibitions. The Legion of Honor, which came to him in 1848, was the last token of official esteem which he received. He had lived in retirement at Villiers le Bel for some years before his death, admitting none but a few chosen friends or exceptionally favored patrons to his presence; and so little was known by the public of his productions of this period that the exhibition of his works, made after his death, caused nearly as great a sensation as had the "Decadence" almost half a century before. From the number and the ability of the American students who received their artistic training in his school, Couture may be said to have had a more important influence on our art than any French painter of his time. It is stated that at the time of his death he was painting the example included in this collection.

DAUBIGNY (CHARLES FRANÇOIS),

France.

Art was an inheritance to Daubigny. Born at Paris in 1817, he came of a family of painters, and all his surroundings were artistic. His father, his uncle, and his aunt were laborers at the easel, and the boy absorbed his first lessons with his childish breath. He became a pupil of his father, and after a visit to Italy and some time spent in the studio of Delaroche, he turned to that universal fount of inspiration—nature—and found in her the secret of his future greatness. His earlier figure pictures and portraits, which are excessively rare, show him, like Corot, to have been a painter of sound and well-trained ability in this branch ; but it was to landscape that inclination and sympathy directed him early and there held him fast. He came out at the Salon of 1838, and after a struggle of ten years, found prosperity and fame. In 1848 he won a second-class medal; in 1853, one of the first class. The seal was set upon his reputation when the Emperor, in 1852, purchased his picture of "The Harvest" for the Tuileries, following it, in 1853, with the purchase of another for St. Cloud. In 1859 he was invested with the Legion of Honor, and in 1875 was made an Officer of the Order. He died in 1878, after having shared with the master painters of Barbizon the glory of regenerating his national art, and left a legacy of masterpieces to the world. Of all the painters in the immortal group to which he belonged he was, perhaps, the nearest to Corot, not only in artistic sympathy, but in an almost brotherly tenderness of personal affection. Daubigny died at Paris in 1878.

Ill health sent him to Paris for a time, whence he returned to his native village, continuing his studies from nature till, in 1866, he entered the Piloty school at Munich. His reputation progressed from eity to city, and from exhibition to exhibition throughout Europe. DELACROIX (FERDINAND VICTOR EUGÈNE),

France.

The pupil of Guérin who made his début in 1822 at the age of twenty-three, with his "Dante and Virgil," lived to see, in 1863, a revolutionized art and literature in France, and to know that he had been in the van of the battle that produced it. Yet Delacroix began as a classicist, and the evidences of this influence struggle in his "Dante and Virgil" for the mastery of his natural tendency to the romantic and tragic side of nature. He abandoned the prevailing cult early, and his travels in Spain and Africa in 1831 gave him the fire and color which were to render his art supreme. He died loaded with honors, but his fullest fame has accrued to him since his strong hand dropped the pencil for the last time. The world has crowned his work with posthumous laurels. The great galleries and the choice collections of Europe and America have made prizes of the productions on which he has stamped his title to immortality, and even the least sympathetic criticism concedes him a unique place as an intrepid leader and a creator of marvelous fecundity and power, to whom the world's art owes a debt of gratitude it can never overpay.

DIAZ DE LA PEÑA (NARCISE-VIRGILE),

France.

Born at Bordeaux, Aug. 21, 1808. His parents were banished from Spain on account of political troubles, and at ten years of age Diaz was left an orphan in a strange country. At fifteen years of age he was apprenticed to a maker of porcelain, where his talent first displayed itself. Medals, 1844, 1846, 1848. Legion of Honor, 1851. Died, from the bite of a viper, Nov. 18, 1876. Diploma to the Memory of Deceased Artists (Exposition Universelle), 1878.

"In the group of painters beyond the average, Diaz de la Peña is the great artist of the fantastical. Anything serves him as a pretext for bringing to light his marvelous aptitude as a colorist. He has not the science of Rousseau nor the poetry of Corot, still less the severe grandeur of Dupré. He renders the enchantments of the landscape flooded with sunshine or the forest plunged in luminous twilight, with beams filtering through the thick leafage; he dazzles the eye with all the seductions of a grand colorist; by these obvious qualities, which affect even the uninitiated spectator, he gets closer to the latter than other landscapists of the time. He is the grand virtuoso of the palette, making sport of difficulties. With him everything is of the first impulse; his work is thrown off with brio; the enchantment of the color carries it along. We can imagine him in the solitudes of the forest of Fontainebleau, making the wooden leg resound on the earth and singing with all his lungs to let off his exuberant nature. The countrymen whom Millet stopped to regard with compassionate thoughts did not attract him. He dots the pond-side, where the sun gleams, with peasant girls, mere little red touches. In his sun-gilt landscapes Diaz puts such figures as offered, by their costumes, a pretext for the wealth of his palette. From the Orient, as he passes through it, he only collects the remembrances of silky stuffs and golden embroideries, spreading forth their pride in the sun; from Italy he only preserves the method of the colorist Veronese, whom he often equals in the attractiveness, if not in the conception, of his work. As for mythology, it is merely his excuse for modeling in full impasto and in open daylight the nymphs and the Dianas."—Extracts from Notes sur les Cent Chefs-d'Œuvres, by M. ALBERT WOLFF.

DUPRÉ (JULIEN),

France.

Originally a student of the figure under Pils and Lehman, Julien Dupré was doubtless directed in the path he has chosen by his association with Laugée. Already, in 1876, he was a painter of rustic scenes, in which landscape and figures preserved an admirable balance, as his "Harvest" showed. In 1880 his two pictures at the Salon won him a medal of the third class, to which others have since been added. He painted at this period in a mellow and warm tone, with a heavy impasto and powerful drawing. By degrees he abandoned this manner for the higher key and brighter atmospheric effect inseparable from painting much in the open air, while his drawing has also become more delicate and refined. His pictures, in which the human figure and cattle are combined in the composition, show him to be a master of form, while in landscape he paints with commensurate skill. Among the younger painters of France no talent better equipped or more symmetrical has developed itself. Dupré is a native of Paris, where he was born in 1851, and is a nephew of the great landscape painter, Jules Dupré.

FRÈRE (PIERRE ÉDOUARD),

France.

Frère was born at Paris in 1819. At about the time when the naturalistic movement was sending the men of 1830 to Barbizon, he found his settlement in the little town of Écouen, north of Paris but a few miles, where he was destined to found a school known throughout the world of art, and of art collectorship. He was the pioneer painter at Écouen, but did not long remain solitary there. Other artists followed him, and pupils gathered about him, just as the colony formed itself at Barbizon around Rousseau and Millet. The charm of his subjects gained for him an early popularity which was materially advanced by the extensive publication of engravings from his pictures. He came out at the Salon of 1843, but had produced pictures of fine quality as early as 1835. In 1850 he received his first medal, and in 1855 the Legion of Honor. The enthusiastic championship of John Ruskin opened the rich market of England for his works. He was an early favorite in America. In Germany he was received with open arms, and so strong was his hold upon that nation that when the Prussians plundered Écouen, his house and studio were held inviolate by them. His death in 1886 was made an occasion of general mourning among his confrères, and the eulogy at his bier, pronounced by Bouguereau, was one of the most noble tributes ever paid by an artist to the memory of a friend and colleague.

FROMENTIN (EUGÈNE),

France.

It was accident which made Fromentin an artist. The son of a well-to-do provincial lawyer, born in 1820 at La Rochelle, he went at nineteen years of age to Paris, to qualify himself to succeed his father. At twenty-three he received his diploma, but a fit of illness, during which he solaced his enforced leisure by gratifying his latent talent for drawing, turned him in the direction of art. He studied under Rémond and Cabat, and his earlier works show little of the feeling of those which rendered him illustrious. While he was making his first experiments as a student, Prosper Marilhat was creating a profound impression by his Oriental landscapes, and Fromentin, who in 1840 had visited Algeria for pleasure, found himself attracted to these subjects in which the gifted pupil of Roqueplan excelled. After his first exhibits in the Salon of 1847, Fromentin again visited Africa. In 1849 he commenced to exhibit Algerine pictures, and they won him a second-class medal. He improved on the model of Marilhat by making figures important accessories of his landscapes, and was speedily recognized as the most sympathetic and poetical painter of Arab life, in France. His influence as the founder of a school of Oriental art was recognized by first-class medals in 1859 and 1868, and in the former year he received the Legion of Honor, being made an Officer ten years later. He was as brilliant a writer as a painter, and his death, in 1876, left in the front rank of French art a vacancy which has never been filled. Followers and imitators he has had many, but among them no successor to him has arisen.

France.

A great French critic once described J. L. Gérôme as standing at the head of modern scholarly art. The phrase was apt. The most striking characteristic of his art is the idea it conveys of vast knowledge, and of logical and searching study, apart from the technical perfection of the art itself. The artist and the scholar are indeed closely united in the pupil of Delaroche, who followed his master into Italy half a century ago, and who in all the years that have since elapsed has never quite forgotten the classical lessons of his youth. Gérôme was born at Vesoul in May, 1824. In 1847 he won his first medal, although he failed to secure the Prix de Rome. He consoled himself for the latter loss by visiting Russia and Egypt on his own account, and while he found little in the former country to attract him, he assembled in the latter the first instalment of that material by which his greatest popularity has since been gained. In spite of his "Phryne," his "Diogenes," his "Alcibiades," and the rest of a long list of powerful and remarkable classical and historical subjects, the Gérôme who will be best remembered by the world is the Gérôme of Egypt and of Africa, the painter who has made these countries live as picturesque facts for us, where Delacroix and Fortuny and their followers and imitators have made them the subjects of romances of color and of subject. It is not astonishing that an artist of so symmetrical and well rounded a genius should be an able sculptor as well as a painter. Gérôme, as long since as 1878, received a medal for sculpture, and some of his plastic productions are likely in the future to receive the honor that falls to the sculptor of the first rank. Every official honor that falls to the French master of our time has fallen to him. He has been a Commander of the Legion of Honor since 1878, a Member of the Institute since 1875, a Professor of the École des Beaux Arts since 1863. His medals of gold and silver fill a cabinet. The Medal of Honor, that crown and glory of an artist's ambition in the Parisian contest for fame and fortune, came to him thrice. In every art museum of his native country and most of the great public galleries and private collections of the world his works find representation. Perhaps no artist ever lived who enjoyed a greater share of the rewards of genius during his lifetime. Certainly few have had as many bestowed upon them while their capacity for profiting by them was yet unimpaired.

HENNER (JEAN JACQUES),

France.

Sixty years ago there entered the studio of Gabriel Guérin, at Strasburg, a rustic-looking young Alsatian named Henner. He had been born at Bernweiler in 1829, and had already developed a marked gift for drawing. After some seasons under Guérin, which witnessed in him a rapid improvement, he went to Paris, where he entered the École des Beaux Arts, and became a pupil of Picot and of Drölling. In 1858 he succeeded in winning the Prix de Rome, which gave him five years of study in Italy, following which he visited and painted in Dresden, and traveled extensively in Holland. No painter since Titian and Correggio had succeeded in securing in the rendition of the nude such charm of color and purity of expression, and he was not long in creating a unique place for himself in his art. His "Susannah," in 1864, carried the day for him in Paris, and was purchased for the Luxembourg Gallery, of which it is one of the masterpieces. Henner received his first Salon medal in 1863, since which time the full complement of national honors has been successively accorded him. He was received into the Legion of Honor in 1873, and became an Officer in 1878.

Born at Stettin, July 2, 1804; died at Düsseldorf, Sept. 29, 1874. History, genre, and portrait painter. Pupil from 1820 of the Berlin Academy, and from 1823 under Schadow, whom, in 1826, he accompanied to Düsseldorf, where he soon became celebrated, and was made, in 1832, assistant, and in 1836, Professor of the Academy. In 1829, with Schadow, and later, he repeatedly visited the Netherlands, where he was influenced by the realistic school of Wappers. Went, in 1830, to Italy, where, as later in Paris, he studied the Old Masters, especially of the Dutch School. Member of the Berlin and Vienna Academies.

In 1888 he followed it with a still more imposing work, 'Waterloo,' based on a passage of Thiers' history. This year (1889) he sends an episode of the bloody 30th of August, 1870—'A Day of Battle: Beaumont.' Hyon won his spurs a decade ago. JACQUET (JEAN GUSTAVE),

France.

A pupil of Bouguereau, Jacquet has chosen for his artistic avocation the perpetuation of the charms of womanhood. His genre pictures and his portraits are almost entirely devoted to the fairer sex, whose grace and beauty he renders with beautiful color and a graceful brush. His female portraits especially have a strength, expressiveness, and delicacy of tone that render them essentially pictures. Born at Paris in 1846, Jacquet has always been a thorough Parisian in his art. He commenced to exhibit at the Salon before he was twenty years of age. In 1868 he gained his first medal, and for a period produced pictures of a historical character, the subjects being usually drawn from the past. It was not until his admission into the Legion of Honor, in 1879, that he began to give his attention to modern life.

Kever has a great reputation as a painter of Dutch peasant home life, and none has better or more sympathetically painted children. He expresses in his paintings very sweet sentiment with a strong, free brush. His subjects are very simple, but seriously painted. His handling of light, whether in interiors or out-of-doors, is particularly happy, and the tone and color are excellent. His works are steadily rising in the estimation of connoisseurs. He received the gold medal of Amsterdam in 1892, and was awarded medals at Munich, Chicago, and other places.

Born at Wiesbaden, 1829. Pupil of Jacobi, and the Academy of Düsseldorf under Sohn and Schadow. Afterward he allied himself with Lessing, Leutze, and Weber. Member of the Academies of Berlin, Vienna, Munich, Amsterdam, Antwerp, and Christiania, and Knight of the Order of Merit. Medals, Paris, 1853, 1855 (Exposition Universelle), 1859. Medal of Honor, 1867 (Exposition Universelle). Legion of Honor, 1859; Officer of the same, 1867. Medals, Vienna, 1882; Munich, 1883. Professor in the Academy at Berlin. Medal of Honor, Antwerp, 1885.

"Ludwig Knaus enjoys the unique distinction of being accepted by Germany as her chief painter of genre, and by the world as one of the leading masters in that art. He owes this double triumph to the variety and independence of his genius. Painting in Germany and delineating German subjects, he still does so in a style so original, so brilliant, and so cosmopolitan that his pictures command the same attention from the stranger, and exact the same respect and admiration, as they win for him at home. He was a pupil, at the Düsseldorf Academy, of Sohn and Schadow, but his graduation in art, after a couple of visits to Italy, occurred in Paris, where he spent eight years studying the methods of the French painters. It is to this that he owes the emancipation of his style from the formality and mannerism of his original schools; and of all German painters of our time, he is probably the only one whom the French artists accept with enthusiasm as one of themselves. The genial humor, fine humanity, and keen comprehension of human nature revealed in his pictures are a reflection of the character of the man himself, and his amiable personality has largely aided his genius in securing him an international popularity. He is a master of technique and a colorist of the first quality. The uniform excellence of his productions has been noted as characteristic of the man, who, whether employed upon a simple study from nature or upon the most elaborate and ambitious composition, considers no work sufficiently finished until he has devoted his best talent."

LEROLLE (HENRI),

France.

A Parisian by birth and schooling, he is less of a Parisian in his art than any other living painter of equal capacity. He is, over all, a student and worshipper of nature, seeing her with his own eyes and translating her in poetic phrases. Lerolle, commencing as a painter of genre and history, soon passed over to the open-air school, and his airy landscapes, with beautiful trees, animated with excellent figures and cattle, secured a prompt critical acceptance. Reaching still farther in his experiments, the artist next produced subjects of which his magnificent "At the Organ," presented by Mr. Seney to the Metropolitan Museum of Art, is a type. Then he turned his attention to peasant life, in association with its labors, somewhat in the style of Millet, but more hopefully and with a gentler and happier spirit pervading them. Lerolle received his first Salon medal in 1879, and each year adds to his honors at home and abroad.

MADRAZO (RAIMUNDO DE),

Spain.

Raimundo de Madrazo was born at Rome, in 1841. His father was his first instructor, and from his tutelage he graduated into the Paris École des Beaux Arts, receiving, later, instructions from Léon Cogniet. In 1878 the brilliancy of his talent, so thoroughly Parisian in spirit and Spanish in verve and color, won him a double honor not commonly accorded. He received, for his work at the Salon of that year, a First Class Medal and the ribbon of the Legion of Honor. Since that auspicious acknowledgment of his ability, Madrazo has advanced from success to success. Some of his most brilliant productions have been of Spanish origin, but he has remained faithful to Paris as a resident, and generally so in his choice of subjects. His younger brother, Ricardo de Madrazo, has also developed into an artist of ability and originality, and some confusion of identity has been occasioned by the similarity of their initials. There is, however, only one Madrazo who will be recognized as the master of the family, upon the just grounds provided by himself. With both France and Spain vehement to claim him, his national and artistic identities are so interwoven that it is not impossible that he may become a subject of international dispute. Several of his pictures were in the Wm. H. Stewart Collection, and he was the brother-in-law and a companion of Fortuny. At the present time (1898) he is in New York painting portraits.

Visited London and Paris in 1863; Italy in 1866; Venice and Vienna in 1868; Rome in 1869; and, in the same year, settled in Vienna at the invitation of the Emperor Francis Joseph, who caused a sumptuous studio to be prepared for the artist, and, in 1876, conferred on him the title of Professor. The winter of 1875-76 he spent in Egypt; then visited Antwerp; and, in 1877, Spain. Professor at Vienna Academy from 1879. Honorary member of Vienna, Berlin, and Munich Academies. MAUVE (ANTON), Holland.

At the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia, a picture which made its mark in the exhibit from the Netherlands was called "Hauling up the Fishing-Boat." It was one of those sincere and simple efforts at the transcription of nature in which Dutch art is supreme. The painter was Anton Mauve, a man no longer in the flower of youth, but of an energetic nature and a fresh and spirited style. He was a native of Zaandam, and had been a pupil of P. F. Van Os, but evidently owed most of his art to himself and to the foundation of all art—nature, that universal mother, at whose breast genius is nourished with a vitality that perennially renews itself. Among the earlier pictures of Mauve one may discover traces of his master, in a painstaking finish, a sleek and smooth execution, and a tendency to pleasant color without fiber or strength. When he freed himself and went forth to his studies in the fields, his manner changed as if within a day. Breadth of execution, simplicity of material, a close observation of the variations of nature, characterized it. The student, having learned the substantial processes of painting, became the artist, susceptible to the fleeting impressions of the scene, swift to grasp and strong to execute them. Always well sustained by the Dutch collectors, he was also the recipient of universal European honors. His pictures received the medals of the Salon, and found their place in the great collections of Europe and America. His death, in 1889, was lamented as a loss to the art of the world as well as to that of his native Holland.

MAX (GABRIEL),

Germany.

The son of a sculptor, Joseph Max by name, Gabriel Max's art life began in the studio of his father, whom he served as an assistant, until his death in 1855. He promptly abandoned the chisel and the clay tubs, and until 1858 was a diligent student at the academy of his native city, Prague. In 1863 he became a pupil of Piloty, at Munich, and, like all of the great pupils of this remarkable master, gained from him the essence of a lofty art without becoming an imitator. His picture of a beautiful Christian martyr on the cross, at whose feet a passing Roman youth sacrifices his crown of roses, made a strong mark for him at its exhibition in 1865, and rendered it possible for him to establish himself independent of his master. In 1867 Max opened his studio in Munich, and a few years later was admitted to a professorship at the Academy. His fame passed early beyond his native border. All Europe concurred in honoring him with medals and diplomas, and in giving to his art a place in the leading rank of modern productiveness.

Germany.

Called, from his birthplace, Meyer von Bremen. Born Oct. 28, 1813. Pupil of Sohn. Member of the Amsterdam Academy. Gold Medal of Prussia, 1850. Medals at Berlin and Philadelphia.

"When young Jean George Meyer emerged from the Düsseldorf Academy in 1842 to install himself in the dignity of a studio of his own, it was as a painter of religious works of the largest size that he aspired to fame. It was not long before he discovered that his talent had mistaken its direction. His heart was not in these academic and artificial compositions, while all around him nature—and above all, human nature—invited him to more congenial fields. So the painter of tradition soon became the painter of fact, and his exquisite little cabinet pictures of domestic scenes and homely episodes of every-day life were not long in securing favor. One of the earliest and most successful of his efforts in this new direction was an interior scene in his own studio, which possesses the additional charm and value of presenting portraits of himself and family in the naive and attractive grouping of a picture."—HEINRICH CARL VON LIEBENAU.

MILLET (FRANÇOIS),

France.

Born in Paris, Jan. 17, 1850. Son and pupil of Jean François Millet. When three months old his father moved his family from Paris to Barbizon, and made it his permanent abode. Here François' infancy and childhood were passed. With two sisters a few years older than he, and several brothers and sisters younger, no child ever spent a happier boyhood. Free to wander in the forest close by, or over the no less beautiful fields on the vast plains about his home; carried on his father's shoulders after the master's painting hours, and discussing with him the aspects and meanings of the beauties and wonders he saw, and a passion for reading and a retentive memory, gave him, as he grew older, a wide knowledge of history and literature. Close observation of trees, plants, and birds, gave him the training of a naturalist. The constant contact with his father's great mind; the conversations of the artists and other illustrious men frequently seated about his father's table—this was François Millet's education. He passed his early life in Barbizon, excepting long visits to his old friend M. Hartman (whose widow lately gave the fine picture "Le Printemps" by Millet to the Louvre), who had large possessions in the Vosges Mountains. There François Millet spent months at a time, alone in the wildest heights, painting aspects of scenery different from those among which he lived, and making special studies of the wild mountain cattle of that country. Several visits to the stern coast of Normandy, his father's country, greatly stimulated and impressed his imagination. He studied in a class of Bonnat's for a short period after his father's death, but in every sense of the word his father was his only master. His teaching was designedly indirect. Through conversations calculated rather to stimulate his son's mind and cause him to formulate his own ideas than actual lessons. He would say, before a study patiently and perseveringly made of a wood where the doves' notes are heard, shaking his head, "Non, on n'entendrait pas les ramiers dans ton petit bois." "No, one would not hear the wood pigeons in your little wood." Such observations were more suggestive and profitable to his pupil than more conventional lessons. The ever-ready example of his father at work; observations of his methods; the progress of his pictures; the elaborate study, and the simple, broad execution, were a perpetual demonstration to his son of the art of painting. Brought up thus in the studio of this great and marvelously industrious painter, François Millet's youth and apprenticeship was like that of the artists of the great Florentine epoch, who, under the eye and guidance of some great master, learned the heights and depths and mysteries of their art, or craft. François Millet's pictures are so simple that one is not struck by any surprising technique or startling effect; a poet who interprets quiet scenes and subjects of simple life of the fields—or more usually a landscape, with the emotion of a sunset or happy sunny orchard—some children playing; women knitting. But it is on reflection that one sees the masterly modeling and drawing; the rich color sense, and the disciplined execution. François Millet has lived the life of a recluse—devoting himself to the care of his mother and an invalid sister, who have now both passed away. Though living in great retirement, close to nature, finding in it all his joy and religion, he has continued to paint and study always. He has exhibited frequently at the Salon du Champ de Mars, and lately in London at the New Gallery. His works are not well known in New York, though there are several here in private collections. M. Millet married Miss Geraldine Reed, of New York, at Paris, in July, 1897, and is at present in the United States. A visit to his wife's family was the chief reason of his coming—but he has availed himself of the opportunity to see once more the works of his father, Jean François Millet, so cherished and in such great numbers in the collections of this country, each one of which he had seen begun and ended on his father's easel at Barbizon.

MUNKÁCSY (MICHAEL),

Austria.

In 1846 the rude village of Munkács, in Hungary, was the birthplace of a child of poverty who was christened Michael Lieb. He had no future but one of misery, such as had preceded him in the experience of his progenitors, and he commenced, almost as soon as he could handle a tool, to earn his meager living as a carpenter's apprentice. For six years he worked at the bench, with an occasional job of house painting to vary the monotony of his labor. From this casual employment he found his way to his future. He taught himself to draw, and, in a crude way, to paint. Then a good-natured, poor portrait painter of Gyula took him up and taught him a little more. From this master he passed into the hands of the Vienna Academy, and, by a supreme effort, finally secured admission into the Munich École des Beaux Arts, where Professor Adam became his friend and instructor. Here the young artist, who was known as Michael of Munkács, which title he has since adopted as his name—Michael Munkácsy—made such strides in advance that he was enabled, by the winning of several prizes, to set himself up at Düsseldorf in 1869, as a painter. The works of Knaus and Vantier inclined him to genre painting, and in 1869 his "Last Day of a Condemned Man" made him famous. His style was so original and so unlike the conventional methods of German art that it attracted attention in Paris, and in 1872 he was emboldened to settle in that city, where he has since resided and where his works have found much favor. He had received a medal at the Salon in 1870, and so was not unknown there. In 1877 he was received into the Legion of Honor, of which he has been an Officer since 1878,

Munich and Vienna have made him a member of their Academies, and the whole world in which art finds patronage has accepted him. His case is an illustration of the triumph of artistic genius over apparently insurmountable difficulties almost unique in the history of modern art.

MURPHY (J. FRANCIS), N.A.,

United States.

A little landscape, executed in a fine harmony of color and with great delicacy of feeling, drew a limited amount of notice, at the National Academy Exhibition of 1876, to a young artist whose name was new to the catalogues. The few who took the trouble to inquire after him found that he was a native of Oswego, N. Y., some three and twenty years of age, and a pupil of no school save that of nature. The predictions aroused by his first exhibit were confirmed by his successive productions, and in 1885 he was admitted to an Associateship of the Academy, from which he was advanced, in 1887, to the degree of a full Academician. Absolutely devoted to the study of nature, Mr. Murphy has created for himself a manner which individualizes him among the chief American painters of landscape. In 1885 Mr. Murphy was awarded the second Hallgarten Prize ($200) at the National Academy of Design, and in 1887 he received the prize of $300 founded by Dr. W. Seward Webb for the Society of American Artists, of which Mr. Murphy is an active and prominent member, and has been awarded a gold prize medal by the American Art Association of New York.

A house painter's apprentice of Edinburgh one day, some sixty years since, applied to the Trustees Academy of that city for admission to the art school as a student. The drawings he exhibited commanded consideration for him, and thus Erskine Nicol commenced one of the most successful careers in the chronicles of English art. From his house painter's labors of the day he subsisted until he had become a sufficiently accomplished draughtsman to undertake an engagement as drawing master at the high school of Leith, in which town he was born in 1825. From Leith he went to Dublin, where he earned his living as a drawing master, and continued his studies, later returning to Edinburgh, and finally, in 1863, settling in London. Previous to his removal to London he had been made a member of the Royal Scottish Academy. In 1866 he became an Associate of the Royal Academy of London, and in due time a full Academician. Devoted to genre subjects, Mr. Nicol has in them produced a long series of superb studies of life and character in his native Scotland and in Ireland, where, during his sojourn and from subsequent visits, he amassed a rich store of material. As a colorist he has no superior in England. As a delineator of character he has no equal in his native art. A shrewd, dry humor expresses itself in his works, and a broad and genial sympathy with humanity lends them heartiness. Although known throughout the world by engravings from his pictures, Mr. Nicol's paintings are of unusual and infrequent appearance in collections outside the insular limits of Great Britain, where they find an invariable acceptance. He has exhibited, generally through the generosity of collectors owning his works, at the National Academy of Design in this city, at the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia, and at a few American loan exhibitions, and has been medaled at the Salon and other Continental art displays.

PASINI (ALBERTO),

Italy.

In the Chevalier Alberto Pasini we have an Italian who paints the Orient as a Turk might who was born to its spirit and nourished on its air. A native of Busseto, near Parma, he enjoyed the instructions of three great masters. From Ciceri he acquired his firm draughtsmanship, from Isabey his color, and bold and fluent execution of the brush, and from Rousseau the deeper feeling and sentiment of that master of landscape.

The influence of Isabey is exercised at its happiest in Pasini's pictures in those exquisite groups of figures with which they are enlivened, and which give to landscapes, in themselves of a masterly style, the additional interest of genre compositions. A fortunate chance sent Pasini to the East at the commencement of his independent artistic career, and in several years' residence in Turkey, Arabia, and Persia, he accumulated the experience and the material upon which his most successful art is based. No man of our time succeeds like him in realizing upon canvas the life and spirit of the Orient, its splendor of color, brilliancy of burning light, and barbaric sumptuousness of gorgeous pageantry. His color is strong, bright, and true, his grasp of form and character vigorous, and his touch has the certainty of a well-schooled hand, directed by an observant eye. His treatment is broad, although not negligent of detail; the light effects of his pictures are often peculiar but always striking, and in his command of aerial perspective he is particularly fine. He sees and presents to us the real life of the Orient from an artistic standpoint, leaving its natural poetry to speak for itself through the truthfulness of his delineations. He is an Honorary Professor of the Academies of Parma and of Turin, a medalist of all the great exhibitions, and since 1878 an Officer of the Legion of Honor, into which order he was received in 1868.

RICO (MARTIN).

Spain.

Rico is a Spaniard by birth, but of almost entirely original development. He was born at Madrid, and taught to draw by a good-hearted cavalry captain who practised art, after a fashion, as an amateur. From the trooper's hands he passed to the Madrid Academy, and he made his living as he advanced by drawing and engraving on wood during his hours of leisure. On the small savings of this labor he would wander off on foot during the summer, studying from nature, living among the gipsies and the herdsmen out of doors, quite as often hungry as well fed, and at the end of the season almost compelled to beg his way back to Madrid. As a result of his unremitting industry, he, in 1862, secured the first Prix de Rome ever given at Madrid for landscape. The four years' pension involved by the prize may be used by the winner either at Rome or Paris. Rico went to Paris. His amiable compatriot, Zamaçois, took him in hand, Meissonier and Daubigny advised him. For four years he studied nature, and then, when his period of pensionate had expired, he found a patron and fortune. The patron was the father of Jules L. Stewart, the painter. In water color, as in oil, Rico's brilliant and animated style commanded praise and popularity, and he was enabled to seek in Spain and Italy, and even in the Orient, for subjects. In 1878 Rico was medaled at the Salon and endowed with the Cross of the Legion of Honor.

Medals, 1869 and 1872; Legion of Honor, 1882. His pen-and-ink sketches are of a high order. For him the aim of art was not beauty, but the expression of truth.

ROUSSEAU (PIERRE ÉTIENNE THÉODORE),

France.

The career of Rousseau was analogous to that of Millet in its protracted and painful struggle. Born at Paris in 1812, poor, sensitive, and of the highest nervous organization, the young artist began with the exhibition of the Salon of 1826 his long life of original effort beset by trouble and despair. He was from the first a naturalist, and suffered repeated rejection, and even insult, at the hands of Salon juries, controlled by disciples of the classical school, to which his art was a perpetual challenge and defiance. He was one of the first men of his time to settle the now famous artistic colony of Barbizon, and with Corot, Daubigny, Diaz, and Dupré, stands as an associate founder of the modern school of French landscape painting. A pupil of Lethière and Remond, Rousseau really, however, owed his artistic development to his study of nature. He received his first third-class medal at the Salon of 1834, medals of the first class in 1849 and 1855, and a Medal of Honor the year of his death. He was made a member of the Legion of Honor in 1852. In 1867, his failure to secure an Officership of the Legion, which was largely due to intrigue on the part of his enemies, proved a severe blow to him, and undoubtedly bore a share in accelerating the advent of the malady which carried him off. His death occurred in 1867.

ROYBET (VICTOR LÉON FERDINAND),

France.

When, at the Salon of 1866, the "Jester of Henry III." won for its painter his first medal, France hailed in Roybet a new prophet in current art. His cavaliers and ladies, his groups and cavalcades, were not only picturesque in themselves and realized with remarkable vividness and vitality, but they were presented in picturesque incidents and surroundings. The painter is a native of Uzès, in the Garde, and was born in 1840. He had begun the study of art at the École des Beaux Arts, at Lyons, and settled in Paris not long before his début at the Salon. An immediate favor followed the warm critical reception of his first works, and he entered upon a career of success which years have only added to, and which has made his name familiar throughout the civilized world. To successive exhibitions he sent a splendid series of canvases, representing social and historical episodes of the past, in each of which his powers found stronger and ever stronger expression; and in the art world itself, and in that of the art lovers whose collections his brush has enriched, he enjoys an esteem which is commensurate with his genius, at once so brilliant, original, and sincere.

SALMSON (HUGO FREDERICK),

Sweden.

At the commencement of the year 1860, Professor Voklund, who presided over the Academy of Fine Arts at Stockholm, pointed out to an artist who was visiting the school a modest-looking young man of sixteen or seventeen, who was painting in the life class from a nude model. He was working with the simplest palette, and only a couple of brushes, but his figure, for accuracy of form and color, was by far the best in the class. The professor, enthusiastic in the cause of his favorite pupil, predicted for him an artistic future of which his student work was an earnest. The youth whom he commended was Hugo Frederick Salmson, a native Swede of the city in which he began his study of his art. From the Stockholm Academy Salmson emerged with sufficient courage to establish himself in a modest studio, where he painted genre pictures based on the history of his Fatherland. These had sufficient merit to produce patronage for him, and in 1869 he was enabled to proceed to Paris, where, at the École des Beaux Arts, and under Charles Compte, he still further improved his technical knowledge and his experience. In 1871 his progress secured for him the appreciation of his native city, in the form of his being elected a member of the Stockholm Academy, and in 1879 he achieved a second triumph in his Salon picture, representing an arrest in a village in Picardy, being purchased from the exhibition by the government for the Luxembourg collection.

SCHREYER (ADOLPH),

Germany.

There is no suggestion of the German in the art of Schreyer, yet it was in that most German of cities, Frankfort-on-Main, that he was born in 1828. Theophile Gautier, who admired his pictures to the verge of extravagance, once defined him as "a Teutonic accident." Schreyer was fortunate in coming of a family of wealth and distinction, in consequence of which he was permitted from his youth an independence of movement and study which liberated him from the then restricted influence of his native art. He traveled much, and painted as he went. In 1855, when his friend, Prince Taxis, went into the Crimea, he accompanied the prince's regiment, and at this period he began producing those battle scenes which gave him his first fame. Wanderings in Algiers and along the North African coasts into Asia Minor, resulted in those pictures of Arab life which are so popular, while visits to the estates of his family and his friends in Wallachia provided him with another of his familiar classes of subjects. Schreyer is essentially a creative painter. He finds his subjects in nature. His memory is a mine of models for him. But everything he paints is imbued with his own spirit, too dashing and bold and resolute to secure the subtle poetry of Fromentin, and too refined in feeling to rival the fierce force of Delacroix, but always instinct with life, movement, and the ripe and rich reflection of the artist's colorful mind. Between these two great painters Schreyer's manner is a happy compromise, entirely independent of servile imitation; an expression, in fact, of a sympathetic recognition of kindred spirits in them. Until 1870 Schreyer was a resident of Paris, but since that time he has divided his life between that city and his estate at Kromberg, near Frankfurt, where he lives surrounded by his horses and hounds, practising his art with an energy that advancing years have been unable to impair. He was invested with the Order of Leopold in 1860, received the appointment of court painter to the Duke of Mecklenburg in 1862, is a member of the academies of Antwerp and Rotterdam, and received first medals at all the important European expositions between 1863 and 1876.

TROYON (CONSTANTINE),

France.

A man of a rustic manner, bluff and bold, who might have been one of the gamekeepers or herdsmen whom he painted—such was Constant Troyon. Troyon was born at Sèvres in 1810, and worked in the porcelain manufactory, as his father had done before him. Riocreux, the flower painter there, taught him to draw, and at twenty years Troyon was a student of landscape painting from nature with some advice and encouragement from Roqueplan, whom he met on one of his sketching tours, and who became interested in him. It was as a landscape painter that Troyon made his début in the Salon of 1833, and in this walk he displayed a sentiment for light and color of the first order; but in 1847 he astonished the Salon, after a trip to Holland, where he had studied the Old Dutch Masters closely, with a cattle piece so splendid in spirit and so powerful in color and vivid realism that his fame was established at a single stroke. In 1849 he was decorated with the Legion of Honor, and the augmentation in the prices and the popularity of his works made him rapidly rich. The great school of French cattle painting, whose foundation Bracassat had laid, Troyon built up. He gave to the brutes he painted, life and soul. His oxen have the grand movement of nature; his cows ruminate the cud and watch you with their soft eyes; his sheep bleat an appeal out of the canvas, and the dog which guards the flock or travels at the heel of the poacher or the gamekeeper only needs to bark to be alive. Poetry saturates his art—the humble rustic poetry which becomes majestic through its very simplicity. Troyon's color, his appreciation of light, and the ripeness of harmony and tone which characterized his pictures, were sustained to the last. He won medal after medal, at Salons and expositions, and enjoyed for nearly twenty years an uninterrupted course of honor and prosperity. Like Corot, he remained unmarried, content with his art and helpful of the younger talents whom his genius attracted to him, and upon whom he made an impression which one sees reflected still in French art. Sixty masterpieces from his brush graced the Salon between 1833 and 1865, in which latter year his splendid career passed into a splendid memory.

VAN MARCKE (ÉMILE),

France.

The most distinguished pupil through whom Troyon bequeathed to the succeeding generation a reflection of his own genius was Émile van Marcke. Van Marcke was born at Sèvres in 1827, of artistic stock. He was employed in the porcelain works as a decorator when he attracted the attention of Troyon. The latter was in the practice of making a weekly visit to his mother, who resided at Sèvres, and so the young decorator and the elder artist were frequently in contact. The constant sermon of Troyon was that the gifted youth should go to nature, and Van Marcke, in the time spared from his trade, obeyed the injunction. He, however, lacked the confidence to produce original work until the encouragement of Troyon again came to his aid, and a certain degree of success emboldened him to abandon the pottery for a studio in Paris. Van Marcke's early pictures betray strongly the feeling and influence of Troyon. While more careful in drawing and more elaborate in detail, their color and technique show the association of the master. But with increasing confidence and experience, Van Marcke created a style, with which he is now thoroughly identified. His color became fresher, livelier, and more brilliant, and his effects of light brighter and more sparkling. He was a master draughtsman, equally a master of composition, and the grouping and modeling of his cattle are always pictorial and true. His landscapes are of an equal degree of excellence, and are replete with the charm of a joyous and smiling nature. Effects of midsummer midday and of showery skies over pastures enriched by a humid soil find particularly happy rendition at his hands. Van Marcke appeared first at the Salon in 1857, and has been repeatedly medaled in 1867, 1869, 1870, and at the Exposition Universelle of 1878 received a medal of the first class. He was invested with the Legion of Honor in 1872, and since then he received many additional medals of honor. Died Jan. 7, 1891.

VERNET (HORACE),

France.

Born at Paris of a distinguished artistic family in 1789, Horace Vernet became the chief battle painter of France, as well as a distinguished painter of historical and genre subjects. He was a pupil of his father, and of Moreau and Vincent, and in 1814 Napoleon I. decorated him with the Legion of Honor with his own hands. He carried off every honor which France could extend to her artists, and died at Paris in 1863.

VIBERT (JEAN GEORGES),

France.

One of the strongest individualizations among the artists of Paris is Vibert. He is not only a painter but a satirist of drastic power and an author of pointed excellence. He is a Parisian by birth, and if he may be said to be a pupil of any one, his master must be considered to be Barrias, although he also did some early work under Picot. He first exhibited at the Salon of 1863, and made a virtual failure. His active intelligence gave a new direction to his art, and seven years later, at the age of thirty, he was decorated with the Cross of the Legion for his "Roll Call after the Pillage." His good-humored satires on the hypocrisy and self-indulgence of monkish and ecclesiastical life did much toward advancing him in popularity, and one of the latter, "The Missionary's Story," may be recalled as having been sold in this city, at the sale of Mrs. Morgan's collection in 1886, for $25,000. Vibert was not content with triumphs in oil alone, but spurred by the exploits of Fortuny in water color, he began in it a series of experiments that have placed him among the first aquarellists of the world. He was the leader in the movement that resulted in the formation of the now powerful Society of French Water Colorists, a society that, by its lofty standard, really forced the Salon into a marked reform in the character and improvement in the quality of the pictures it accepted for exhibition.

ZAMACOÏS (ÉDOUARD),

Spain.

Born at Bilboa, Spain, 1843. Pupil of Meissonier. Made his début at the Salon of 1863. Medal, Paris, 1867. Died, 1871. Diploma to the Memory of Deceased Artists (Exposition Universelle), 1878. A Spaniard with the wit of a Frenchman, a painter with the satire of Goya and the art of his master Meissonier, it is no wonder that the début of Zamacoïs in 1863 was hailed by Paris as the rising of a new sun over the horizon of art. The artist was then twenty-three years of age, burning with the fire of youth, and spurred by the daring of an audacious and fecund brain. At each succeeding Salon his exhibits widened his popularity and augmented his reputation, which was crowned in 1870 by his "Education of a Prince," a satire so bitter and scathing, yet withal so brilliant in its execution, that reprobation was disarmed by the genius of which it was the evidence. The picture was the swan-song of the artist. He died in 1871, having scarcely turned his thirtieth year. The life work that he left formed a series of gems, sparkling with wit and color, in which the influence of Meissonier showed in a certain decisiveness of handling, but which were thoroughly individual and unique. Like Molière, with whose genius that of Zamacois displays a decided affinity, the effect of the artist's work was always allied with, and supported by, the extremest elegance of execution. He was fond of daring experiments of color, and his pictures were a perpetual amazement and delight to artists more timid and less original, who acknowledged in the fiery young genius from Bilboa one worthy to take his place among those masters whom Paris was proud to call her own, irrespective of their birth or blood.

ZIEM (FELIX),

France.

Born Feb. 25, 1821. In the earlier stages of his career, Ziem painted many fine pictures of French, Dutch, and Turkish scenery, but it was when he commenced to develop the mine of material in the Queen of the Adriatic that he struck the keynote of his vocation. A native of Beaune, in the Côte d'Or, he was graduated out of the art school of Dijon, and began his productiveness by records of his wanderings in Southern France. He received his first Salon medal in 1851, for a picture of Dutch scenery, and was admitted into the Legion of Honor in 1857 for his views of the Golden Horn at Constantinople, and the Place of St. Mark at Venice. He has been an Officer of the Legion since 1878. His color, which is the strongest feature of his art, has the grand and mellow splendor of the greatest period of ancient art. His sunsets flame with subtle melodies of color. His dawns over the lagoons and canals of the Adriatic have the palpitating blaze of jewels. Where Rico gives us the Venice of broad daylight, scintillant with real sunbeams, and brilliant with wide and penetrating light, Ziem translates her mornings and her evenings into rhythmic notes of color, which bring up in the memory of the spectator scraps of the verses of De Musset, of the descriptions of Gautier, and of the romances of Venice's own history in its days of imperial and irresistible power.

Sacred Oxen

Cabinet picture in the manner of Pettenkofen. Two white oxen with very long horns are seen curiously harnessed to a cart which carries a driver in modern Slav costume. Very effective in color, and simply conceived and executed.

Signed at the right.

Height, $5\frac{1}{2}$ inches; length, 8 inches.

C. GEIBEL

The Pretzel Boy

Cabinet picture of a nice, clean looking boy with a great square basket filled with his wares hanging before him by a strap over his shoulder. He is counting his pennies, and seems to be a good little man of business.

Signed at the right. Dated, 1883.

Height, 9 inches; width, 7 inches.

OTTO PILTZ

Grandpa's Pet

The old gentleman, in a blue cap, is teaching the baby how to stand up on his knees, and shows in his face evident interest in the operation.

Signed at the right upper corner.

Height, 20 inches ; width, 7 inches.

F. DE CHAMBORD

"Marie"

Cabinet picture of a girl in blue with a yellow scarf, seated, in half-length view. Her gown is décolleté, and her hat of blue and yellow, with feathers, matches her gown.

Signed at the right upper corner. Dated, 1881.

Height, 8 inches ; width, 5½ inches.

HUGO SALMSON

A Swedish Lady

Small cabinet picture of a lady in a pink robe, with a white shawl, standing before a piano, with her face turned to the spectator. A unique example of Salmson.

Signed at the right.

Height, 8 inches ; width, 6 inches.

6

G. HYON

French Cavalry

These troopers wear the uniform of the Second Empire. Three officers are seen in a group, on the left of the canvas, sitting on their horses, and one of them is scanning the horizon with his glass. The main body of the troops appears on the right. The sky is gray and the ground is lightly covered with snow. The picture, painted in a scheme of grays, is made very effective by the judicious use of red notes.

Signed at the right.

Height, 8 inches ; length, 12 inches.

EDOUARDO EROLI

$1000.

La Fille du Regiment

Scene in an Italian camp, with a cantinière giving a drink to a trooper. The uniforms belong to a period in the eighteenth century. The colors are gay and brilliant.

Signed at the right. Dated, 1876. Height, 16 inches; width, 11½ inches.

A. TAMBURINI

$1200.

An Old Monk

The monk, in his costume of rich violet, brown, and white, has his hands folded on the handle of a brazen vessel in his lap. With his spectacles on his nose, as he looks downward in meditation, he presents a picture of well-fed, pious contentment.

Signed at the left upper corner. Height, 12 inches; width, 10 inches.

JULES BRETON

Handwritten: Portrait of Jules Breton
$240

Portrait of Himself

A cabinet portrait of Jules Breton painted by himself when a young man. It is in three-quarter length, and the subject wears a white shirt and voluminous neckcloth. The left hand rests on the hip. The date shows that the artist was nineteen years of age when he executed this interesting work.

Signed at the right, "Courrières, 1846."

Height, 14 inches; width, 10½ inches.

10

G. H. McCORD

$400.00

Winter Night

Cabinet picture of a pretty winter landscape, with snow, and a church lighted up, and the moon high in the clouds. Suggestive of Christmas eve. A charming bit, with much feeling in the treatment.

Signed at the right with monogram. Height, 8 inches; width, 6 inches.

II

JOSÉ BENLLIURE
The Picador's Reward

$ 65.

The picador, crossing the arena before the crowded seats of the bull ring, turns, hat in hand, to acknowledge the applause from the benches. The ground is strewn with cigars, fans, hats, and other tokens which have been thrown at his feet by the enthusiastic crowd. The execution is broad and free, and the central figure is painted with sturdy realism.

Height, 21 inches; width, 14 inches.

12

GOMEZ PLASERT
Strolling in the Park

$ 86.

A lady, in street costume of more than a decade ago, with brown skirt and sealskin jacket, is here seen by a riverside, with pleasure boats, and pretty foliage on the opposite bank. The head is charming in type, and the entire picture is executed in a direct sort of style that makes it very effective. The color is agreeable and veracious.

Signed at the right. Dated, 1886. Height, 22 inches; width, 18 inches.

OSWALD ACHENBACH
Garibaldi's Caprera Home

The composition shows an humble dwelling with white stucco walls on the island of Caprera, which lies in the Mediterranean east of the northern point of Sardinia. Here Garibaldi lived from 1854 until his death except during the time spent in his famous Italian campaigns. The effect is one of sunlight, with a blue sky, and the sea in the distance to the right of the picture. The light is so distributed as to draw the gaze of the beholder to the chief object of interest—the rugged little house on the cliff. Painted with breadth, and attractive in color.

Signed at the right.

Height, 18 inches; length, 25 inches.

O. Achenbach
$ 245.

14

E. L. WEEKS

Scene in Cairo $ 200.

A very brilliant example of this noted artist's Oriental pictures. The scene shows a richly clad horseman, with elaborate trappings on his Arab steed, who has brought a fine black horse to the doorway to be inspected by two sheiks. There are other figures about, and the setting consists of Moorish architecture remarkably well painted. Through an archway at the right is a view of a market-place and a patch of blue sky. Color and drawing are of a high order.

Signed at the left,

Height, 15 inches ; length, 18 inches.

15

F. SOULAEREIR $ 165.Bonjour

A very attractive single figure of a beautiful woman, in a luxurious costume of pink satin, with green flowered satin overdress attached on the shoulders at the back. She is seen parting the silk-lined portières as she emerges from her boudoir with a smile of welcome. She is of the Southern type of blonde beauty, and presents a most engaging appearance in her elegant surroundings.

Signed at the left,

Height, 33 inches ; width, 16½ inches.

16

F. MIRALLES $ 130.Recreation

Two Parisian young women, in a secluded nook in the wood by a brook-side. One, in brown, is seated on a camp-chair facing the spectator; the other, in mauve costume, lies flat on her back in the grass and herbage, and looks up at a bunch of flowers which she holds in her hand. Figures and landscape are painted with artistic snap and go, and the picture is very modern and attractive.

Signed at the right.

Height, 23 inches ; width, 19 inches.

17

ERSKINE NICOL
An English Family

$64.00

A typical English scene, showing a landed proprietor and his lady conversing with the aged porter at the lodge gates before entering their property. There are other figures, and the architectural features are quaint and interesting.

Signed at the left.

Height, 17½ inches ; length, 22½ inches.

18

A. RIGON
Wedding at the Castle

$40.

This gay scene presents a great multitude of fine ladies and gentlemen about the perron and staircase of a lordly chateau. A pink-striped silken awning is spread overhead from the portico to the great trees which line the avenue. The costumes are very brilliant, but the harmony of color is excellent. The work is painted somewhat in the manner of Isabey, and the general effect is most pleasing and attractive.

Signed at the right.

Height, 25½ inches ; width, 20½ inches.

19

KÉMÉNDY YENŐ
The Artist's Studio

$40.

The artist, seated at his easel, has paused in his work, and with his head thrown back to look up at his wife, who is standing by his side with her hand on his shoulder, seems to be saying that he will leave his picture and come to luncheon. The work is frankly and solidly painted, with the best traditions of the Munich School, and the quiet color notes of blue, gray, and terra-cotta make an agreeable harmony. Especially notable is the drawing of the artist's head in its foreshortened position.

Signed at the right.

Height, 28 inches ; width, 20 inches.

20

AYN PEZANT

Cattle

A black-and-white cow grazing and a red cow lying down in the pasture. Beyond the hedge are seen the farmhouse, and, on the hill, cottages and barns. The sky is filled with slaty gray clouds, and there is a fine harmony of reserved color in the picture.

Signed at the right.

Height, 19 inches; length, 23½ inches.

21

E. L. GARRIDO

Promenading

Scene on a wide Parisian street, or boulevard, with the Column of July in the distance. Numerous figures in the foreground, all of them women and children, except two sergents de ville, or policemen, who are chatting together. The brown foliage on the trees which line the street shows that it is autumn, and the women wear their jackets and the policemen their overcoats to protect them from the frosty air. Painted with the characteristic energy and interest of this clever artist.

Signed at the right upper corner,

Height, 21 inches; width, 17 inches.

22

F. VINEA

The Favorites

A handsome woman in a rich costume of white satin with trimming of gold braid, a large Louis XIII. gray hat and plume, while drawing back a tapestry portière, turns her head with a smile of welcome to a pretty white lapdog, who looks up at her as he advances. A white parroquet, perched on the lady's left hand, may be supposed to occupy only a secondary place in her affections. The accessories denote a luxurious home, and the picture is effectively handled throughout.

Signed at the right. Dated, 1883.

Height, 18 inches; width, 14 inches.

23

A. HAGBORG

A Jack Tar

A young sailor, seated on a big piece of timber on the seashore, is smoking his pipe and looking intently at something that attracts his attention in the landward direction. He is a sturdy fellow, and his head and figure are relieved with fine effect against the gray sky and the broad expanse of calm sea which reflects the light color of the clouds.

Signed at the right.

Height, 30½ inches; width, 16 inches.

24

MEYER VON BREMEN

Girl Reading

Seated on a bench beside a table, with a window at the left and pots of plants on the sill, a little girl is shown reading from a large book which she holds on her knees. The light falls on her golden head and is reflected on her face from the open pages, making a delightful effect. The expression is very sweet and attractive, and the conception of the subject simple and pure. It is a lovely representation of the innocence of childhood.

Signed on the border of the tablecloth. Dated, 1848.

Height, 16½ inches; width, 13 inches.

25

M. RICO

Scene in Venice

In the center, a bridge over a canal, with people passing over or loitering; on either side, houses with their picturesque architecture, and color effects made by the gaily colored awnings, blinds, and curtains. Over all a sky of intense blue. The water reflects the whole in a shimmer of light and shadow.

Signed at the right.

Height, 28 inches; width, 19 inches.

26

E. MUNIER

Feeding the Pigeons

A graceful figure of a girl in Greek costume of white, standing by a fountain with pigeons all about her. The setting for the figure consists of classical architecture and decorations. The feminine type is charming, the drawing excellent, and the color scheme delicate.

Signed at the left. Dated, 1876. Height, 25 inches; width, 23 inches.

27

O. DE PENNE

Wild Boar Hunt

A stirring episode of the chase at the moment when the hounds surround the savage quarry at the edge of a forest. A fight is inevitable. This is a characteristic example of De Pennec's painting of dogs and hunting scenes, in which he is a past master. The landscape shows an effect of early autumn, and is broadly and energetically painted.

Signed at the right. Height, 21 inches; width, 27 inches.

EDOUARD FRÈRE

Maternal Love

A poor woman is seen sewing in her humble cottage, with her baby asleep beside her in a basket cradle. The accessories are poor and simple: an old chest of drawers, a crucifix on the wall, a candle, and a tin cup. The light falls from a window at the left, and is concentrated on the mother and child in the middle of the canvas. The color scheme is quiet and subdued. This excellent example of the work of the celebrated French master of Écouen comes from the George I. Seney Collection, 1891. — 1025.

Signed at the left. Dated, 1862. Height, 16 inches; width, 22 inches.

29

J. G. VIBERT

An Uneven Game

In a Spanish courtyard a monk and a muleteer are playing a game of cards. The monk is in somber brown, and the hostler in gay colors, the surroundings showing a faithfully portrayed bit of local scenery. It is easy to see how the game will end, for the friar has one extra card in his sleeve, and another under his heel on the ground. The story is well told, and the expression on the faces is carefully studied.

Signed at the left.

Height, 8 inches ; length, 10 inches.

30

D. TENIERS (the younger)

The Rivals

A group of three people in a somber interior. A young woman stands on the left, clad in a costume of green and white, with a red headdress. She is singing. Two young men—one seated on a bench behind her, the other on the floor, playing a lute—seem anxious to be in her good graces. The figures relieve against the dark background with striking effect.

Signed at the left. Dated, 1648.

Height, 12 inches ; width, 10 inches.

31

J. FRANCIS MURPHY

Landscape

An evening effect with a brilliant and luminous sky of yellow. A group of trees is seen on the right, and a brook in the foreground reflects the glowing tints of the sky. Though a small canvas, this work exhibits much sentiment and breadth of effect.

Signed at the left.

Height, 8 inches ; length, 10 inches.

32

J. A. GONZALES

$70.

The Spanish Coquette

In this charming little picture, a Spanish girl in her best clothes—blue bodice, yellow skirt, black lace, tiny blue slippers, white lace veil, and a huge red sash tied in a bow behind—is taking a peep in a mirror preparatory to going out on the promenade or to the bull-fight. The figure is excellent in character, and is very well painted.

Signed at the left. Dated, 1873.

Height, 10 inches; width, 8 inches.

33

G. PAPPERITZ

$90.

After the Bath

A young girl in diaphanous white drapery is leaning back against a great, bent trunk of a tree after her woodland bath. Her head is tipped to one side and a smile illumines her features. There is a pretty contrast here between the pink flesh tints and the fresh green of the foliage behind the figure.

Signed at the right.

Height, 15½ inches; width, 10 inches.

34

PAUL SEIGNAC

$100.

Shelling Peas

A scene in the courtyard of a French farmhouse, with a gate in the wall opening on a vista of sunny landscape. A woman and four young girls are seated about a table engaged in shelling the peas which are brought by a boy, who is emptying a basketful on the table. The grouping of the figures is effective, and the work is a characteristic delineation of peasant life.

Signed at the left.

Height, 17½ inches; length, 21 inches.

A Dutch Kitchen

This arched and vaulted kitchen looks like the crypt of some old abbey turned to every-day uses. A young woman is seen standing by a big cooking range, and pots, pans, and kettles of brass and copper are hanging on the walls. The daylight from the window and the firelight are skilfully managed, and the general aspect of the work, with its strong contrasts, is very striking.

Signed at the middle right.

Height, 19 inches; length, 24 inches.

$160.

Death of the Standard Bearer

The soldier who carries the banner lies on the ground, and the enemy's troopers are tearing away the coveted prize. A big dog, faithful to his dying master, attacks a soldier who is seizing the flag. In the distance the battle rages in smoke and the fury of fighting.

Signed at the left. Dated, 1839.

Height, 18 inches; length, 21 inches.

37

The Reprimand

$700.00

A stern-looking old man, with a dingy heaver on his head, sits by the fireplace leaning on his cane. Before him is a girl of fourteen or fifteen who seems to have incurred his displeasure. The faces show the most searching study of character, and both figures are painted with sober reserve. The color is agreeable, and the composition bears on its face the marks of sincerity and truthful delineation of a characteristic American phase of life in the country.

The Falconers

Knickerbocker
350

Great palm bushes, tropical plants, and a pool are seen in the foreground. At the right, two horsemen hawking at the herons and cranes of the marshy country. Both show the masterly style of Pasini at his best. The sky is a marvel of clean, direct handling, and the picture, as a whole, is a most important and excellent example.

Signed at the left. Dated, 1879. Height, 17½ inches; length, 27 inches.

G. H. BOUGHTON

Katrina Van Tassel

$450.00

This charming picture has for its subject the blooming lass of eighteen who was the daughter of a substantial Dutch farmer, and is celebrated in Washington Irving's "Sketch Book." She is tripping down the snow-covered pavement along the canal in her fine, quaintly designed costume with fur-hooded hood and cape, her muff and her apron of embroidered cloth. Her face is a sweet picture of youthful feminine beauty, and the view of the town with its gables and spires is delightfully represented by the artist. It is a supremely good example of Boughton's work, and attractive both in subject and treatment.

Signed at the right. Dated, 1881. Height, 23 inches; width, 15 inches.

GUSTAVE COURBET

25

The Stone-Breakers

This is a composition similar to the celebrated picture which made such a great sensation at the Paris Salon of 1851, but on a smaller scale. The canvas is a low-toned one, showing a hillside of dark green and a bit of blue sky at the upper left corner. On the road in the foreground are an old man on his knees with a hammer, and a boy with a basket. The general effect is striking and powerful.

Thoughtful

$500.00

A charming head in profile view of a young girl with Titian hair, the face and neck painted in full light in pale but tender color, with warm shadows. The blue eye, red lips, and delicate flesh tints form a beautiful harmony.

Signed at the right upper corner.

Height, 17½ inches; width, 12½ inches.

$110.

Landscape, Cattle, Sheep, and Goats

A red cow is the most prominent feature of the central group. Beyond, is another of dun color, a white-bearded goat, sheep, and a shepherd under a tree. The landscape is treated with careful attention to detail. There are tall trees on the right, a river and hills in the distance. The sky shows clouds of rose color at the horizon, and the composition appears as a pastoral of genuine charm.

Signed at the right. Dated, 1783.

Height, 17 inches; length, 22 inches.

DANIEL HUNTINGTON

$140.

Princess Elizabeth

An ideal picture of the unfortunate sister of Louis XVI., who fell an innocent victim to the Reign of Terror. The type is blond; the head is inclined to the right, and the eyes are directed to an illuminated prayer book, or missal. The beaddress with pearls, and scarf, are of blue. The bodice is made of gold and white embroidered stuff. About the neck is a string of pearls. A characteristic picture by the well-known American artist, who was for so long President of the National Academy of Design.

Signed at the left. Dated, 1879. Height, 23½ inches; width, 19½ inches.

The Sentinel at the Sultan's Tomb

The white-robed figure of the sentinel with his black beaddress, stands unperturbably before the doorway. He holds his long gun in his hands, and a dog sits on the sill as nonchalant as the sentinel. The setting for this admirable figure is formed by the great arched entrance to the Sultan's tomb, with its curious, picturesque architectural features and inscriptions. The blue tints of the tiles and fretwork, and the pale green curtain banging over the door are prominent notes in the color scheme. The sentinel is a marvel of careful, scholarly execution. From the George I. Seney Collection, 1885.

ÉMILE VAN MARCKE

Rich Pasturage

A group of four cows in the foreground with two others farther away. The pasture is framed in by a line of trees in the middle distance, and there is a gray sky with threatening, dark clouds. The contrasts of color between the cows and the landscape are effective, and the handling is strong and broad.

View at Vichy

A road running through the wheat fields, red-roofed cottages, and two laborers in the path, are the principal elements in this frankly painted and excellent landscape. It possesses the warm, mellow tone that characterizes some of the work of the great artist who was the painter's father, but is personal in conception and treatment.

On the Terrace

The scene depicts the terrace, or piazza, of a restaurant in the environs of Paris. It is in the long summer twilight, and a river flows below at the right. A young woman sits at a table, her face in full view to the beholder, and is nibbling shrimps at the beginning of her dinner. At the table behind her a man betrays his interest in her by casting glances in her direction. Other diners, a waiter, and a profusion of still life are features of the composition. It is all very well painted, with broad, comprehensive brush work and good color.

Shepherd and his Flock

An excellent specimen of the painting of a talented modern artist. The shepherd is of the every-day type, without pastoral accessories of costume, and leans on his staff, smoking his pipe, with his faithful dog at his side. The sheep, which are deftly painted and have the true look of live animals, browse about the shepherd on the level plain.

Voices of the Night

237

On the edge of a fountain basin sit frogs chanting a chorus, while facing them is a circle of cats and owls, with a company of dogs beyond. Certainly the ensemble of their voices must form a strange melody. This is one of the characteristic fantasies of a well-known American painter of animal life and humor.

An Unwelcome Guest

$75.

A French soldier and his sweetheart are enjoying a day in the country, and while seated on a stone bench in loving converse are suddenly interrupted by a cow, who has come up from the neighboring pastures and sticks her head through the bushes behind them. The soldier is seen with his hand on the cow's muzzle pushing her head away, while the young woman exhibits her trepidation in a clinging position. The story is well told and is full of humor.

The Country Doctor

The doctor, with a benignant expression, sits in his big chair before his desk while the mother stands before him with her little girl who has every appearance of suffering from a toothache and of dreading the doctor's forceps which lie on the table. The father is seen timidly entering at the doorway in the background. The mother is a nice type of peasant woman, and the doctor is the personification of the country practitioner. The chief color notes are red, green, brown, and white. All the still life and details are cleverly painted.

The Artist's Leave-taking

$310.00

Truly a noble picture. Two men in mediæval costume are seen at the porch of a suburban dwelling. Both are painters, and one, who has just been making a visit to the other, is saying good-by. The host is in blue, with a skirted tunic ; the guest, in a magnificent dress of black, gray, and yellow. The subject is attractive ; the picture is most soundly painted, and the color is masterly in its scheme of soberly tempered rich tints.

Phidias in his Atelier

$350.00

The great Greek sculptor of classical antiquity is here represented in his studio at work on a statue. Through the open doorway leading out to a sunny courtyard, visitors are arriving, and in the foreground to the left are two beautiful women and a lovely girl idling in the studio. The subject is one which pleases and fascinates, and the representation conforms to archaeological traditions. The three women, especially, make a beautiful and attractive group. The picture is painted with this celebrated artist's customary skill and attention to detail.

The Falconer's Recital $525.00

Here is a group of six ladies and a pretty page sitting in a richly furnished apartment. Some of them lean over the backs of their chairs as they listen to the tale of the falconer, whose face is animated with the vivid recollection of his story. He is dressed in red, and his brave bird perches on his left hand with wings erect. Two finely painted stag hounds stand at the falconer's side. The chatelaine is costumed in white, and the dresses of the other personages—blue, crimson, and yellow—form an elegant harmony of color. The epoch is in the Middle Ages. From the Mary J. Lunchtime in the Kindergarten

The schoolroom and another apartment seen beyond, through the open door, are crowded with children. Every attitude and expression of humor, contentment, interest, and pleasure is depicted in the faces and figures, and one little girl, in the middle of the composition, is crying. The patient, sedate-looking mistress is peeling an apple for an expectant good boy, who is near her. There are some sixty figures, and all are truthful studies of character. The picture is not only good in detail, but it is admirably "held together," and the color and atmosphere are worthy of all praise. It is the work of a strong, conscientious artist who thoroughly understands the difficulty of painting such a picture as this and shows that he knows how to master it.

J. F. RAFFAËLLI

La Place de l'Opera

$ 600.00

In this large canvas we see the naturalistic tendencies of M. Raffaëlli in their first blush. The dominant color notes are gray and black. The great carriage in the center of Paris is full of people and vehicles. The sky is gray, with the morning sun touching up the misty clouds with pink; and broad, atmospheric shadows are cast by the buildings. All of the architectural features are carefully wrought, and the picture gives a full front view of the beautiful opera house, with the well-known Café de la Paix on the left. The figures are depicted with a fine sense of individual character.

La Chanson

The composition presents a fine interior, with five figures with costumes of the time of Louis XIII. A lady sits in a chair playing a mandolin, while two men—one with a violin, the other with a 'cello—join in the harmony. Before them stands a youth, in an elegant light-colored embroidered costume, who is about to sing. In the shadow a cavalier in a red cloak stands in the doorway, which opens upon a terrace. This is a work of decided merit, and one of the most important of Lesrel's pictures. It is beautifully painted, and is most attractive in general aspect.

The Hussites Before Naumburg, 1432

Procopius, the General of the Hussite army, is here represented giving attention to the mute appeal of the children of the fortress of Naumburg, before which his forces camped during the long war which followed the burning of John Huss, the Bohemian reformer, on the 6th of July, 1415. The victorious General had threatened to give everything in the fortress to fire and the sword. A deputation of children was sent with the key of the place, and a plea to spare the lives of the inhabitants. This incident is the subject of the picture. Night is settling down upon the city. The glimmering of the camp-fires is seen in the distance. The little children are in the foreground, presenting the key on a yellow cushion to Procopius, who, clad in his armor, is surrounded by his stern body-guard. J. F. BALLAVOINEA Dream

This beautiful full-length nude female figure is shown as emerging from the horn of Morpheus, typical of sleep. It is an ethereal conception, and the young girl is of an innocent but voluptuous type. A girdle of pale yellow drapery floats about her figure, and the broken chains of slumber drop from her wrists. The figure is surrounded by a decorative border, painted on the canvas, of beautiful and symbolic design. The whole is executed with a fine conception of creative beauty, and shows a delicate scheme of color. This important work was painted to order for a Russian prince.

DAVID COL

A Regular Customer

220

An excellent example of the famous Dutch artist. A good-natured old gentleman, seated at a table in the hall of an inn, has come across an amusing story in his newspaper, and hastens to repeat it to the hostess, who, clad in red, with a gray apron, stops to listen. Truth to nature characterizes this fine little bit of anecdotal painting.

Signed at the right. Dated, 1884. Height, 11 inches; width, 9 inches.

M. SCHOLZ

Monk

50.

This is a monk who works for his living, as may be seen from the blue apron covering his chest. It is a natural study of human nature.

Signed at the right. Height, 12½ inches; width, 9½ inches.

101

LOUIS APOL

River Scene

A symphony in grays. A church and houses appear on a point of land which juts out into the stream. The sky and water are delicate in tone.

Signed at the left.

Height, 11 inches; length, 15½ inches.

102

G. HYON

A French Cuirassier

The figure of the horseman in this excellent cabinet picture is directly and effectively painted somewhat in the masterly style of Géricault. The cavalryman in his steel armor, and the chestnut horse, are relieved with striking effect against a background of gray sky and dull green plain.

Signed at the right.

Height, 12½ inches; width, 9½ inches.

103

A. TAMBURINI

A Good Hand

A monk in brown laughing so that you can almost hear him. He is holding back his cards, and has just played one which makes it difficult for his opponent to beat him. An excellent example of Tamburini's cabinet studies.

Signed at the upper right.

Height, 11½ inches; width, 10 inches.

104

BURR H. NICHOLLS

A Street Scene in Brittany

Near the window of a cottage in Finisterre sits an old woman with her knitting. The sunlight falling upon her is welcome, and the cocks and hens about her are also enjoying it. A good example of genre painting by a well-known American artist.

Waiting for the Boat

The fisherman's wife, with her child in her arms, waits on the beach for the return of the boat in which her husband earns their living on the briny deep. The good woman is healthy and fresh looking in her white cap, her blue socks and sabots, and the group makes a fine silhouette against the steely colors of the sea and sky.

R. DE MADRAZO

the blue with white hair
La Belle Désœuvrée $575.00

This beauty, with nothing to occupy her, is sitting in some public resort in carnival time, with a glass on the table beside her. Her costume is the garb of Pierrette, with a blue cloak trimmed with white fur. The girl is of a charming type, and the painting of the picture is of that extremely clever, dashing sort, yet combined with the most serious technical qualities, which is found in Madrazo's most successful works.

A Literary Reunion under the First Empire

Over a dozen figures, men and women, old and young, grouped about a long table covered with a green cloth. A young man is reading a paper, or poem, to this attentive audience gathered in a fine library. The types of savants and blue-stockings are full of character; the general treatment is sober, and carried out with a great deal of charm. This picture is of value not only for its artistic excellence, but also because it is a truthful document portraying a scene of life and manners in a brilliant epoch of the past.

J. G. VIBERT

The Disclosure $900.00

This is a fine example of the work of the famous painter of cardinals, priests, and monks. Here we see a cardinal and a priest in a secluded walk in a garden, the priest evidently revealing to his superior some important secret, or perhaps the existence of an ecclesiastical plot. The story is very clearly told, and the contrast between the red and black robes is made very effective. The two figures form a group of much interest, and the technical qualities of the work are of the best.

Patience is a Virtue

The color is very true and of most agreeable quality. Especially fine is the effect of light in the room at the back of the picture, where, at the head of a flight of stairs covered with a rich red carpet, the squire sits at his ease, and peruses the letter, or petition, that has just been presented by one of his tenants. This worthy man stands in the hall resigned to await the outcome of his mission. The types are Irish; the story is well told, and the execution of the picture is worthy of the high reputation of its painter. From the George I. Seney Collection, 1891.

HORATIO WALKER

Striking a Bargain.

(Water Color)

The scene shows a Dutch farmer, in blouse and wooden shoes, talking with expressive gestures to an old wife, who holds her cow by the horn, and seems to reflect on the value of the farmer's words. The thatched roof of the shed in the background and the chickens pecking among the straw form an appropriate setting for this rustic picture of every-day life. The artist, well known for his skill in the manipulation of the water-color medium, has treated this subject with breadth and simplicity.

CHARLES HORACE VERNET

Training Horses

At the door of a stable, two horses are harnessed together with training ropes, and tied to the stone wall. A third, a fine sorrel, who is loose, is biting one of them. This is a most effective work; the horses being painted with great skill and knowledge; and the color is fine and distinguished. Two hostlers are looking on from the doorway, and the composition, as a whole, may justly be said to rank with the representative works of the great French master.

JIMENEZ-Y-ARANDA

A Spanish Pharmacy

Julius P. Archer
This chemist's shop, in the time of Louis XVI., contains eight figures. Five are customers or idlers; one of them a priest who is taking his part in the gossip of the day. The pharmacist and his assistant are seen at the left, compounding a prescription with anxious faces. The picture is very interesting as a study of life and manners; the many colors in the costumes and the accessories make up a good color ensemble. From the George I. LUDWIG KNAUS

The Butcher Boy

This boy is of the type the great German master of genre was fond of painting. He is sturdily planted on his feet while he whets his knife, and his smiling face and roguish expression show his consciousness of being the right boy in the right place. The figure is well and characteristically painted, and the execution of the accessories should also be noted. The "pluck," hanging from a hook in the wall of the shop, in the right upper corner of the canvas, may serve as an example of exceedingly clever still-life painting, and yet in this composition it is entirely unobtrusive.

Signed at the left. Dated, 1879. Height, 25 inches; width, 19½ inches.

147

J. J. HENNER

Madeleine

This is a brilliantly painted recumbent, semi-nude figure of a young girl, with blonde hair, and lustrous dark eyes. Her head rests on her hand, as she looks up from the book spread out on the ground before her. The lights and shadows on the fair body, with its drapery of blue, are handled in M. Henner's characteristic manner, while the background is merely suggestively treated.

Signed at the left. Height, 19 inches; length, 24½ inches.

Landscape with Figures

A charming group of three young women, partly draped, and accompanied by three little Amours, are seen sitting in a forest glade. The stuffs are of pink and crimson, blue and white, and the flesh tints show some very delicate and subtle color. The faces of the young women are pretty, and the group is charmingly composed.

LÉON VICTOR DUPRÉ

Landscape

$380.00

While the influence of the artist's famous brother, Jules Dupré, may be manifest in this picture, it also possesses individual qualities. The color is rich and deep, and the elements of the composition are a pool with cows in the foreground, great trees on the right and left, and a sky of gray and white clouds with a patch of blue.

Changing Horses in the Tyrol

An animated scene in the Tyrol, where the diligence has stopped to change horses at an inn. The travelers and servants are bustling about, and the horses that have been taken out of the harness are being fed and watered. Francesca da Rimini and Paolo

The two lovers are seated on a great, carved wooden coffer. Francesca's costume consists of a beautiful white satin gown with pink sleeves, and the light is concentrated upon her face and figure. Paolo's head is in shadow behind her. His arm is about her waist. In this fond attitude, Francesca reads from a book some interesting story to her admirer. This picture is one of Vély's important compositions, and is fully representative of his talent.

A Visit to the Convent

This shows the convent courtyard, with a charming lady in white, who has come to visit her little daughter. She is a lady of fashion, and her black poodle sits beside her. The little girl, in her school garb, presents a striking contrast. She seems to be telling her mother of the ups and downs of her life in the school, and to be receiving proper sympathy. The color scheme is in delicate tints with modifications of gray, and the picture shows much clever painting.

CARL VON PILOTY $1,600.00

Elizabeth and Frederic of Bohemia Receiving News of the Loss of the Battle of Prague

Prague, the capital of Bohemia, in the year 1620, had two kings at war with each other, Frederic V., supported by the Protestant Prince of Germany, and Ferdinand, by the King of Spain and the Catholic League. Sunday morning, November 8, 1620, is the time of the dramatic scene represented in this masterly historical picture. The room in the palace is crowded with figures. Elizabeth is seen standing behind Frederic. His mother, a daughter of William of Orange, sits on his right. The English ambassadors are in the background. The musicians are throwing down their instruments in alarm. The messenger who brings the news of the disaster is on the left of the central group. He wears the style of armor used by the princes in the Thirty Years' War. Armor in the first part of the seventeenth century was becoming a thing of the past and was used for display more than for service. Its introduction, therefore, in this composition is seen to be appropriate. There is masterly work in the execution of these heads and figures, and the ensemble is both dramatic and artistic. This great picture may well stand as one of the best of all those painted by the famous Munich master, as he painted nothing in every way more complete and successful.

Homage to the Dauphin, 1638

A faithful and most interesting historical picture. The infant son of Louis XIII. and Anne of Austria is being presented to the court to receive its homage. This is the royal babe who afterward became Louis XIV., "Le Roi Soleil." To conjure up from the past, after a lapse of two and a half centuries, a court ceremony of this description; to bring the dead to life; to clothe them with historical accuracy, and make them move, speak, and act, as the painter has done in this work, is a difficult undertaking. It is equally difficult to handle so many personages with such a wealth of brilliant color, and produce an ensemble that will not be confused. Both tasks have been successfully accomplished in this remarkable picture. The joyous queen mother and the royal father will be at once recognized. The other personages, beginning on the left, are the following:

Lady of Honor (in front),
Madame de Lauzac,
Princess de Guéméné,
Princess de Condé (seated),
Countess de Solsons,
Duchess de la Trémouille,
Duchess de Montpensier (young girl),
Duchess de Bouillon,

ÉDOUARD ZAMACOÏS

Levying Contributions

This important work by a master painter was finished in 1866, and exhibited at the Paris Salon of 1867. In the hall of a grand seventeenth century chateau a begging monk receives entertainment at the hands of his roguish hosts. He is seen seated on a bench, sipping a cup of chocolate, while an elderly cavalier, a young lady, and a young gallant form a group about him. The young man seems to be reading verses, a love poem, probably, from a manuscript copy, and accompanies some subtle point with a gesture full of meaning. The older man stands at the right of the monk in a pose suggesting authority and a sense of pleasant mockery and humor. Particularly worthy of note are the heads of the elderly cavalier and the monk. The young lady, in blue, is very cleverly painted, and her hand, resting on the arm of the bench, is equal, technically, to anything to be found in the pictures of the Old Dutch Masters. The composition is so admirably disposed, and the story so well told, that the picture may be ranked very highly, both from the point of view of subject genre and artistic achievement. This picture attracted much notice at the Salon of 1867, and is to be marked as a rare example of a painter whose works it is almost impossible now to acquire. It is in every way representative. JOSEPH COOMANS

A Classic Beauty

Head of a girl, with her hair dressed à la Grecque and a pink drapery over her shoulder. The expression is attractive, and the painting is highly finished.

Signed at the right. Dated, 1880. Height, 17 inches ; width, 13½ inches.

230

The Lecture

A gentle reproof is being administered by the mother to her little daughter. The costumes and accessories are of the Louis XVI. period, and there are effective contrasts of color, notably in the notes of black and yellow.

Signed at the right. Height, 19½ inches ; width, 13½ inches.

231

T. W. WOOD

"I Reckon"

An old farmer, in his well-stocked barn, is counting on his fingers. An American genre subject.

Signed at the left. Dated, 1877. Height, 20 inches ; width, 14 inches.

232

A. KOWALSKI
A Ride in the Park

This is an admirable canvas, as good, in its way, as a Meissonier. Two gentlemen, in seventeenth century costumes, the one with a coat of mouse color and the other in red, are riding their horses—one iron gray and the other dun color—through the park. The season is in the autumn, and bare trees and a sky of dull gray, white, and patches of blue appear above the marble terraces. The execution is thoroughly artistic and of the cleverest sort, while the color is delicate and delightful to the eye.

Signed at the left.

Height, 12½ inches; length, 17½ inches.

233

PETER KRAEMER
A Knight

This is a strongly painted head of a man wearing a helmet, whose countenance is stamped with shrewd benevolence.

Signed at the right. Dated, 1880.

Height, 18 inches; width, 14 inches.

234

AUGUST FINK
Landscape and Cattle

A landscape which is very pleasant in tone with a dark gray sky, a group of dark foliaged trees in the middle, and cows in the pastures.

Signed at the right.

Height, 13 inches; length, 21 inches.

235

L. E. ADAN
Marguerite

A graceful, attractive figure in a lilac gown. Out through an archway appears a courtyard with a well, and women drawing water. This charming picture is painted with the skill and distinction that characterize the work of a popular and very clever artist. From the J. Ahner Harper Collection.

Signed at the right.

Height, 15½ inches; width, 12½ inches.

236

M. ARNOUX

The Old Hunter

An old man is seen before the fireplace warming his hands, while a little boy holds his gun and a little girl tantalizingly holds up a rabbit before the good dog that has helped to kill it. A fine little genre picture with good, quiet color.

Signed at the left.

Height, 18 inches; width, 14½ inches.

237

GEORGE H. STORY

A Cape Ann Fisherman

A weather-beaten, white-bearded old man, seated with his pipe in his hand. A careful, conscientious study of a toiler of the sea.

Signed at the left. Dated, 1879.

Height, 18 inches; width, 12 inches.

238

LOUIS BRUCK-LAJOS

Rehearsal

An artist, in a suit of brown velvet, is at work in his studio, while, in the foreground, a lady and a cavalier are amusing themselves singing a duet. Costumes and accessories of the time of Louis XIII.

Signed at the right.

Height, 17½ inches; width, 14 inches.

239

J. G. VIBERT

Inspecting the Fort

A view on the ramparts of a fortified castle in the olden time. On the left a sturdy old retainer, with his arquebus planted before him, stands near a highly polished cannon on a massive carriage. The royal banner floats proudly above his head. Beyond, a party of ladies and gentlemen are looking about under the guidance of a young officer. This is a picture of great merit and much individuality. It is remarkably well painted, and notable for its excellent drawing and the faithful reproduction of an episode in earlier days. From the George I. Seney Collection, 1885.

Signed at the left. Dated, 1867. Height, 17 inches; length, 28 inches.

$135.00

The Smoking Room

There are over a dozen passengers in the smoking room of this Atlantic liner, and there is dirty weather outside, as may be seen through the open door. This is a familiar scene to all ocean travelers, and it is depicted with fidelity. The effects of color, atmosphere, and smoke are cleverly rendered.

Signed at the right. Dated, 1880. Height, 15 inches; length, 31 inches.

The Tête-à-Tête

A pretty genre, with a story told by the man and the woman whose velvet armchairs are hitched together, and who seem very happy in each other's society.

Signed at the right. Dated, 1881. Height, 17 inches; length, 24 inches.

242

$60.00

Moose Lake, Adirondacks

(Water Color)

A carefully studied landscape in greens, grays, and white.

Signed at the left. Dated, 1883. Height, 18 inches; length, 30 inches.

243

A. DE GROSSI

The Jolly Cavaliers

(Water Color)

Here is a group of cavaliers in a courtyard and two pretty girls to flirt with. A good example of the Roman Water Color School. Painted in very brilliant tints.

Signed at the right. Dated, 1882. Height, 21 inches; length, 30 inches.

Moorish Prisoners

(Water Color)

Half-nude men under guard of a soldier in blue. For a Roman water color this is somewhat somber in tint, but it is none the less excellent.

Signed at the right. Height, 25½ inches; width, 19 inches.

245

F. FASCE

A Bird that can Sing, etc.

(Water Color)

The admirers of this kitchen beauty are trying to coax a song from her. The scene is in a wine cellar. Painted in the brilliant tints of the Roman School.

Signed at the right. Height, 21½ inches; length, 30½ inches.

246

E. ZAMPIGHI

The Gun-maker of Tangiers

(Water Color)

The gun-maker is nude except for a loin cloth. He is seated on a rug and examines a long gun which two Arabs have brought for his inspection.

Signed at the right. Height, 29½ inches; width, 20½ inches.

247

G. SIMONI

$165.00

Cavalier and Jester

(Water Color)

This picture shows extraordinarily clever work in water-color painting. The washes are simplicity itself, yet they "model" beautifully. Especially to be noted are the treatment of the jester's red costume and the carved coffer on which he is seated.

Signed at the right. Dated, 1879.

Height, 14½ inches; length, 20½ inches.

248

G. SIMONI

$110.00

Harem Interior

(Water Color)

A highly finished water color, with minute detail painting.

Signed at the right. Dated, 1882. Height, 9½ inches; width, 6½ inches.

Rehearsing

$1025.00

A cardinal, in his brilliant robe, is playing on his bass-viol before a lectern of bronze which holds his score. A Spanish hat and jacket, hanging on the wall, indicate that the room is the sacristy of some great Spanish cathedral. It would be difficult to find anywhere a more complete, brilliant, or more charming cabinet picture by Vibert, than this example.

Signed at the left.

Height, 11 inches; width, 7 inches.

250

D. A. C. ARTZ

Gathering Wild Flowers

$110.00

(Water Color)

Little Dutch peasant girls gathering blossoms in fields near the sea. It is pretty in color, and cleverly washed.

Signed at the right.

Height, 14½ inches; width, 9½ inches.

251

LOUIS EUGÈNE LAMBERT

The Pet Kitten

Lambert is undoubtedly the best painter of cats and kittens in modern art. He chooses no other subjects. This is a delightful little picture of a kitten with a big sky-blue bow at her neck, with her head turned to one side.

Signed at the right.

Height, 14 inches; width, 11 inches.

252

A. TAMBURINI

Hard Luck

An old monk looking at his cards and wondering how he shall play to avoid being beaten. A representative cabinet picture by this clever artist.

Signed at the upper right.

Height, 11½ inches; width, 10 inches.

253

J. A. DE GRAVE

School Recess

Five little tots are here sitting in a row on a low bench at recess time. The A. B. C. is forgotten and the point of interest is in dolly. From the J. Abner Harper Collection.

Signed at the middle right.

Height, 13 inches; width, 10½ inches.

254

W. C. BEAUQUESNE

On Guard

A French soldier of the line standing on sentinel duty, his hands tucked in his coat sleeves and his arms enclosing his gun. The setting shows that it is a cold, raw day. An artistic bit of painting.

Signed at the right. Dated, 1882.

Height, 13 inches; width, 10 inches.

255

A. A. LESREL

Soldier, Time of Louis XIII

A very carefully and ably painted small figure of a man past middle age, but still young in spirit and strength, firmly planted on his feet and bending the point of his long sword on the floor. The painting of the head reminds us of the work of the lamented artist Barye. From the J. Abner Harper Collection.

Signed at the right. Dated, 1873. Height, 9½ inches; width, 7½ inches.

256

JAN VERHAS

In the Boudoir

This charming work shows a tall and beautiful lady in a black velvet gown, with a gray picture hat with black plumes, and a white lace wrap over her shoulders, about to leave her elegant boudoir. As she parts the green and white silk portières she turns her head and makes a sign to her little lapdog, who wishes to follow her, but must stay at home. The technical qualities of this picture are of a high order, and the color scheme is most attractive.

Signed at the right.

Height, 27 inches; width, 19 inches.

257

ÉMILE VAN MARCKE

Cattle

A fine group of two cows close up in the foreground, with a third farther off on the right. The attention is at once arrested by the splendidly painted dun color and white cow, which forms the most prominent feature of the picture. No less excellent is her companion, a dark red animal, gazing into space after the manner of cows. This is a remarkably fine piece of cattle painting, notable for its strength and technical beauty. From the H. L. Dousman Collection.

Signed at the right.

Height, 22 inches; length, 32 inches.

258

N. V. DIAZ

Forest of Fontainebleau

This masterly composition shows a clearing in the forest with a pool in the foreground. The foliage is all green and of great variety and subtlety of tint. The arrangement of the masses, the light, and the shadow, are admirably disposed. The painting throughout is broad and virile. From the George I. Seney Collection, 1885.

Signed at the right. Dated, 1862. Height, 30 inches; length, 38 inches.

259

J. L. GÉRÔME

Bab-el-Zouel

This large composition by the great French master includes many figures and elaborate architectural work. It is very finely finished throughout, and is singularly agreeable in color. The entire foreground is in transparent shadow, and sunlight falls on the walls beyond with fine effect. The scene is laid at the gate of Bab-el-Zouel, which ends the large bazars at Cairo. This place is always filled with people of all countries. One sees there Fellaheen, Jews, inhabitants of the borders of the Red Sea, people from Central Africa and Abyssinia, men from the Soudan, traveling merchants, purchasers, loungers, and European tourists. The composition shows two Sais, or runners, in white, who clear the way for a pasha on horseback. The mixed population forming the throng in the gate appear in a variety of picturesque and, of course, as Gérôme is the painter, absolutely authentic costumes. The scene is full of life and color. M. Gérôme, in a letter to the late Mr. Powers, dated "65 Boulevard de Clichy, Paris, November 16, 1886," writes as follows concerning a most interesting feature of this picture: "Contrary to my usual custom and to accede to your wish, I have signed this picture twice—the first time with my name and the second time with my portrait; in the right hand corner, the person dressed in blue. On my head there is a green turban, to which I have no right, because only those who have returned from a pilgrimage to Mecca may wear it. It is true that I have been very near that holy city. This work is therefore doubly authenticated."

Signed on the wall on the right, just above the head of the artist's own portrait.

Height, 39 inches; width, 25½ inches.

260

EUGÈNE FROMENTIN

Arab Falconer

Falconry in Algeria is the exclusive sport of high Arab chiefs. In this noble picture, the falconer on his horse is galloping at full speed with his right hand extended upward. On his hand sits one of the falcons, another perches on his head, the third is flying close behind. The figure and horse are full of life and motion. The work is bigbly finished and rich in color. It was painted for M. Durand-Ruel; etched by Millus for the catalogue of the collection of Lepal-Cointet, Paris, and was purchased from that collection in 1881. It came to Mr. Powers from the celebrated collection of Albert Spencer.

Signed at the left.

Height, 42 inches; width, 28 inches.

261

M. DE MUNKÁCSY

Feeding the Favorite

A rich drawing-room in which two ladies, one in blue and the other in pink, are sitting at a table whereon are seen fruit and dainties. The lady in blue is giving a sweet morsel to the greyhound by her side. The still-life is especially fine in treatment, and the color throughout is clear and fresh. From the Governor Morgan Collection.

Signed at the right.

Height, 31 inches; length, 40 inches.

262

E. RICHTER

The Jewel of the Harem

A dark-skinned slave clothed in the richest of stuffs with heavy gold ornaments, holds a tambourine in a graceful pose to shade her face. At the right we see a hall with open windows, and white minarets and a blue sky without. From the Dousman Collection.

Signed at the left. Dated, 1879.

Height, 34½ inches; width, 22½ inches.

263

GARCIA Y MENCIA

El Pelel

The effigy of Judas is being tossed in a blanket, on Easter eve, according to an old Spanish custom. Seven women, all gaily attired, hold the blanket, and men and other bystanders are looking on. The fun is going on in a carrefour, with shops in the square and the sky above as a background.

Signed at the right. Dated, 1876.

Height, 25½ inches; length, 36½ inches.

264

A. MAUVE

Holland Landscape and Cattle

A remarkably fine example from the brush of the celebrated modern Dutch master. In a lovely landscape, with a pool and willows on the left, and level pastures, are two cows, one white, with a black head, and the other dark red. The sky is fine in tone, and the whole picture is delicious in color. It is a very strong piece of painting, and the white cow is seen at a glance to be a most admirable workman.

Signed at the right.

Height, 29½ inches; length, 42½ inches.

265

AUGUSTE HAGBORG

The Fisherman's Wife

The fisherman's wife is young, healthy, barefooted, and brown. With her basket slung on her hip, and her baby boy on her back, she is striding over the sands of the seashore, and presents a charming picture in her bodice of dark blue and skirt of brown. The sea stretching out in the distance, and the cloud-covered sky over all, form a pale gray setting for this picturesque figure. There is much atmosphere in the depiction, and the painting throughout is characteristic. It is a fine example of Hagborg's pictures of fisherfolk and the sea that feeds them.

Signed at the right.

Height, 46½ inches; width, 29½ inches.

266

ANTON ROMAKO

Louis XV. Sentinel

$170.00

This is not, as might be supposed, a weather-beaten soldier, but a pretty woman with crimson cloak and laced cocked hat with plumes. She holds a jeweled musket over her shoulder, and looks like a mistress of the revels.

Signed at the right.

Height, 38 inches; width, 31½ inches.

267

T. KINDSDAEL

The Fishing Boat

$325.00

The boat has been hauled up on the beach, and a man and a woman are busying themselves about it. The sea stretches out beyond. A striking effect.

Signed at the left. Dated, 1886.

Height, 32 inches; length, 57 inches.

268

BENJAMIN CONSTANT

Al Fresco, Tangiers

$1900.00

Here is a picture under African skies with roofs and terraces, beautiful women, rich costumes, and rugs. This celebrated painter is thoroughly at home in this class of subjects, and in this fine composition is seen in one of his happiest moods. The effect is in sunlight, and the upper part of the canvas shows the blue sky of Morocco.

Signed at the left.

Height, 41 inches; width, 38 inches.

269

W. KRAY

Venus Aphrodite

$1475.00

This lovely conception presents the Goddess of Love in graceful pose and floating drapery, surrounded by nymphs and amours. The head is charming in type, and constitutes a superb creation, while the flesh tints of the beautiful figure are delicate and life-like. The general color scheme is pitched in tender grays, with warm contrasts. The composition illustrates the myth which represents the goddess as rising from the foam of the sea.

Signed at the left.

Height, 63 inches; width, 45 inches.

270

G. JAKOBIDES

Children's Quarrel

An old woman is holding a baby on her lap, and it is pulling the hair of a little girl. Two other children at the table are interested spectators. The figures are life-size, and the painting is typical of the Munich School, the color inclining to grays and the drawing competent.

Signed at the left.

Height, 44 inches ; length, 70½ inches.

271

W. A. BOUGUEREAU

The Little Pilferers

A peasant girl and a child have been pilfering fruit, as it is easy to see from the well-filled basket in the foreground of the picture. The young girl is helping her little companion to climb over the orchard wall, and the action of both figures is expressive, and well caught by the artist. The drawing is masterly, as is usual with Bouguereau, and the heads, hands, and feet may all be noted for their grace and charm of line. The color scheme shows chief notes of purple, blue, white, red, and brown. A superior and very important example.

Signed on the right of the canvas near the top of the wall.

Dated, 1873.

Height, 79 inches ; width, 43 inches.

272

A. VÉLY

The Heart's Awakening

This is a picture which attracted great attention at the Paris Salon. A beautiful young girl, who is just reaching the age when her heart longs to find its deals in the flesh, is listening at the feet of a stately grande dame, who has, perhaps, been reading to her, from the book in her hand, the story of some young and gallant cavalier. The color scheme, with its two robes of white and black, is diversified by other tints, and the ensemble is harmonious and beautiful. From the H. L. Dousman Collection.

Signed at the right. Dated, 1880.

Height, 96 inches ; width, 57 inches.

273

T. COUTURE

Love Drives the World

This splendid cartoon is a most important and interesting work by the famous painter of "The Roman Decadence," now in the Louvre. A woman with white drapery drives a cart of modern construction, to which are harnessed a span of four men. They represent Bacchus, the Soldier, the Poet, and the Lover. The conception is carried out with a noble decorative sense, and is a unique canvas in the world of art. From the T. J. Blakeslee Collection.

Signed half way up at the left with the initials "T. C."

Height, 58 inches ; length, 83 inches.

274

AUGUSTE HAGBORG

October. The Potato-Gathering

This is the masterpiece of a celebrated Swedish painter who is identified with the modern French School, and has won many honors at the Salons and Universal Expositions at Paris. The picture is in every way complete, and impresses the beholder by its sentiment and its hardy and virile technical achievement. The group of the laborer and the woman, the latter holding the mouth of the sack, into which the man pours the potatoes from a basket, is resolute in line and vigorous in execution. The head of the young woman, seen in profile against the gray sky, is charming in its simplicity. The man's head is shadowed by his wide-brimmed hat, and forms an effective contrast to the other with its forceful silhouette. The composition reveals the most earnest and thoroughly artistic qualities both in drawing and color, and the picture may be said to take rank with the best productions of the naturalistic school, which seeks its subjects in the picturesque life of the toilers of the soil.

Signed at the right.

Height, 100 inches ; length, 74 inches.

275

Grand Clock

Made to order by Eugène Cornu, movement by E. Farcot ; has calendar, astronomical, thermometer, barometer, and other attachments, elaborate carved Sienna marble case, with finely wrought bronze figure, by Carrier, surmounting, holding pendulum. From the A. T. Stewart Collection.

Extreme outside measurement : Height, 13 feet ; width and depth, 3 feet.
